WOMAN

SUFFRAGE
CHAMPIONS

Salem Will Be Honored Tonight by a Visit From a Band of Talented Women

Rev. Anna H. Shaw, who speaks at the First M. E. church tonight will be accompanied by Mary Anthony, Miss Laura Gregg, manager of the Oregon equal suffrage campaign; Miss Laura Clay of Kentucky, Mrs. Sarah A. Evans and Mrs. Grace Watt Ross of Portland.

Miss Mary S. Anthony was present at the memorable convention held in Seneca Falls in 1848. Her sister, Susan B. Anthony, who was teaching school at that time, was not in attendance. Miss Mary signed the declaration of principles read by Elizabeth Cady Stanton. The declaration bore the signature of sixty-eight women and thirty-two men. Every provision of this radical document has, since that time, been conceded, save that of political equality, which now obtains in Wyoming, Colorado, Utah and Idaho, and in limited forms in twenty-two other states of our Union.

Miss Mary S. Anthony possesses the same characteristics of liberality, progress and courage so admirably expressed by her famous sister. She has always been the quiet and sustaining aid of suffrage work, and will be a source of inspiration to the women of Oregon, who are confidently looking forward to their political enfranchisement next June.

Miss Anthony and Miss Gordon will take part in the contemplated parlor meetings to be held in Portland.

Miss Laura Gregg of Kansas is conceded to be one of the best organizers the finest lecturers of the National American Woman Suffrage association. She unites to her unusual executive ability a persuasive eloquence and a gracious womanly dignity that is a convincing combination in her work for woman's progress. Her experience for woman suffrage, but Miss Gregg makes me see it in a new light. She appeals to the better side of a man. And he expressed what is really the charm of her work and her life.

Miss Laura Clay of Kentucky, who is at present engaged as a lecturer for the Oregon State Equal Suffrage association, is a woman of superior attainments. She is a member of the celebrated Clay family, so prominent in American history. It was her kinsman, Henry Clay, who uttered the ever-remembered statement, "I would rather be right than be president." Her father, Cassius M. Clay, while minister to Russia, negotiated the purchase of Alaska, and her brother, Brutus J. Clay, is at present minister to Switzerland. Miss Clay's gift of oratory is an inheritance, and her ability and earnestness make her a most delightful speaker.

Mrs. Sarah A. Evans is one of the most versatile and capable of women. She first came into prominence in Oregon as a worker in the Woman's Club movement, where her efficiency as a leader and knowledge of parliamentary law gave her immediate recognition. She was the instigator of the free library and brought it to a successful conclusion in the face of seemingly insurmountable obstacles. In her literary work as editor of the Woman's department of the Portland Evening Journal, Mrs. Evans has distinguished herself, not only as a ready and able writer, but as a woman of excellent judgment and having a comprehensive idea of the needs and interests of her readers. Her two daughters have inherited much of her ability. Mrs. Pettenger being prominent for her talents in elocution, and another daughter, Mrs. L. D. Smith, is an influential resident of British Columbia, where she is a in campaigns for equal suffrage covers a longer term of years than her appearance would indicate. She began her work in 1894 in the Kansas movement for full suffrage. In 1895 she devoted her labor to Oklahoma and was the first to organizing suffrage clubs in that territory. The shifting population and the undeveloped country made this a difficult task, but so well was the work begun that it formed a basis upon which to conduct a campaign in 1898. In this year an equal suffrage bill was submitted to the legislature of Oklahoma, which passed the house, and was defeated in the senate by but two votes. The interest aroused in the territory was intense. When the bill was first presented to the house it was regarded as a joke, and this attitude was maintained for some weeks, until the women of Oklahoma resented the indignity and the joke resolved itself into a serious matter, falling of legislative enactment by two votes only.

In addition to her many personal attractions, Miss Gregg possesses a fine spiritual nature which radiates an unconscious helpfulness and uplift. After a recent address one of her audience said: "I have heard a great many citizen and a voter.

Mrs. Evans' interests in civics led to her appointment as market inspector, which office she fills with credit to herself and most acceptably to the people of Portland. Under her supervision the markets and places where food stuffs are sold have been placed upon a sanitary plane, unequalled by any city in the United States.

In club organizations Mrs. Evans is an unrivalled authority. She is a charter member of the Portland Women's club, was also its president and is now serving her second term as president of the Oregon Federation of Women's clubs. Portland may well be proud of her all-round clever woman, who surely would be a wise and worthy voter.

As secretary of the Sacajawea association Mrs. Evans labored earnestly for the success of this enterprise, which was a just recognition of the debt the Northwest owes to a pioneer woman.

Mrs. Grace Watt Ross was the first president of the City Federation of Clubs, and after an interim has again been chosen to this office. Mrs. Ross was the delegate to represent the Portland Woman's Club at the biennial of the General Federation of Women's clubs held in St. Louis.

WHAT MADE BRADY ANGRY.

Something About "The Redskins" and Its Critics.

There are two ways to look at "The Redskins," writes Franklyn Files, and the two views are so different that I shall try to put both before you. Donald McLaren meant his play to be, and many agree with him that it is, an idyllic, poetic transcript of life among the Indians before we started them downward from native nobility toward badly civilized degradation. The craft is in good imitation of Belasco's. A curtain painted mistily with buffalo hunts and warpath encounters gets into us a sympathetic atmosphere. The action begins with a pow-wow of right savage warriors at the tepee of a chief in a forest, and it passes through five other settings which in dramatic art has hardly been surpassed. A romantic tragedy of the young squaw's love is started by the chief's killing of one who tells of the girl's illegitimacy and is progressed by a combat in which that hateful talebearer slays her lover. All of that is acted skillfully. A savage rite at the stake where a culprit is to be burned is danced and sung by Sioux from the Rosebud Agency thrillingly. At the end, in the allegorical manner of Belasco, the dying visions of Adolphe are shown in beautiful illusions, the girl lying conched beside a river, on which her imagination sees her dead lover come in a canoe to carry her to the happy hunting ground. The first audience applauded mightily. "I hope that's on the level," said William A. Brady, the producer, with tears running down his face and dripping into his voice, "and that I won't wake up tomorrow morning with the same old sickening thud. I know that if we deserve it we'll get it, but I hope to God we don't."

On the second night Mr. Brady appeared before the curtain in an equal yet different state of emotional agitation. Most of the morning journals' reviews had taken that other view of the play which I referred to. Mr. Brady was exceedingly wrath. He has been unable to see any fun in the printed ridicule. He declared war on the humorists and vowed that if he couldn't drive them out of town he would himself go away to make productions.

A LAST SWAT AT BRADY.

William Winter Pays His Respects to the Manager.

In the New York Tribune William Winter, who was one of the severest critics of "The Redskins," had this to say on the last representation of the play:

The career of "The Redskins" in this city came to an end at the Liberty theater last night, and that compound of Indian mush, flavored with extracts from other and better products, will now be conveyed into the regions of the hayseed and the happy hunting ground. It has been pathetically stated that the author, Donald McLaren, has never seen the plays that contain almost all the points of merit in "The Redskins." Those plays, unhappily, were produced long before "The Redskins" saw the light of Mr. McLaren's effulgent burly upon the astonished world. But sympathy is felt with Mr. McLaren, because certainly he has missed some good dramas and some fine performances.

Mr. Brady and his "Redskins" have derived a wealth of advertisement out of the late breeze of controversy, such as money could not buy, and, although the talkative manager has had the misfortune to incur the friendship of the Rochester Clarion (and of a few black-guard circulars, pretending to be news papers, near home), he, probably, will reap a harvest of prosperity out of those seeds of discord. Just now, like young Lochinvar, Mr. Brady has gone into the West, where he has again blown the vocal trumpet—this time in praise of the wisdom, magnanimity, justice, purity and altogether celestial virtues of the Western press—and where, it is to be hoped, he may find plasters for his bruised emotions and encouragement to wipe his weeping eyes. Meanwhile the waves have subsided here into a holy calm. "The Redskins" will be succeeded at the Liberty theater on Monday by Mr. Chapin in his imitation of Abraham Lincoln.

A Pleasant Way to Travel.

The above is the usual verdict of the traveler using the Missouri Pacific railway between the Pacific coast and the east, and we believe that the service and accommodations given merit this statement. From Denver, Colorado Springs and Denver there are two through trains daily to Kansas City and St. Louis, carrying Pullman's latest standard electric-lighted sleeping cars, chair cars and up-to-date dining cars. The same excellent service is operated from Kansas City and St. Louis to Memphis, Little Rock and Hot Springs. If you are going east or south, write for particulars and full information.
