DID SHE EARN THE MONEY

Carnegie's Daughter and Others, Did They Get the Money Square

Of the multimillionaires of the coming generation, the richest by far, in expectation, is a little girl, Margaret Carnegie, who will be some day the wealthiest woman in the world, inheriting the bulk of her father's enormous fortune, estimated at $300,000,000.

Margaret Carnegie, who is about 10 years of age, is the only little girl in the world who is the proprietor of a palace in her own right. The palace in question is on upper Fifth avenue, in New York, opposite Central Park and it cost $2,000,000. Four years ago it was given to her by her father as a Christmas present when newly completed, and she (the key of the front door being placed in her small hand) was the first person to enter the magnificent dwelling.

Another of the great multimillionaires of the next generation is now a baby—a boy baby, who lives in Providence. His name is Brown, and he is the son of the late John Nicholas of that name dying a short time ago, left a great endowment to Brown university. It was Baby Brown—already the possessor of $18,000,000 in his own right—who, with his own hands and a towel, the other day, his mother aiding him, laid the corner stone of the principal building provided for by the legacy in question, contributing, for formality's sake, the requisite dab of mortar.

Eldest Son Generally Favored.

There has been a tendency within recent years for rich men in America—the practice seems to have been started by the Vanderbilts—to leave the bulk of their property to their eldest sons after the European manner, with a view to keeping the money together and maintaining the importance of the family. Thus it is likely that most of the millions of George Gould will go to his oldest offspring, young Kingston, a dark, frail looking youth, who, by the way, bears a remarkable resemblance to his grandfather, Jay Gould. The Gould estate is supposed to be worth about $100,000,000, and George Gould's personal wealth is estimated at $35,000,000. Young Kingston, who is barely 20 years of age, has been trained by his father in vigorous outdoor sports, and, although delicate, is a good polo player.

E. H. Harriman, whose fortune is estimated at $20,000,000, has two boys, the older being 16 years of age. They have been brought up on his great estate called Arden, which is three miles from Tuxedo, and comprises several thousand acres. From their father they inherit a fondness for horses, which, next to money making, is the millionaire's passion. The only photograph of himself that for many years he has been willing to have printed represents him holding the reins over a fast trotter.

Ogden Reid, who will inherit the New York Tribune and probably some share of the millions of D. O. Mills, is at present a junior at Yale. He is a handsome young fellow, tall, swarthy and with regular features. Last fall he had his nose broken in a football game, and the services of a skilled specialist were required to straighten the organ.

The future head of the sugar trust is even now in training for that responsible position. He is Horace Havemeyer, a youth of 20, taller than his father, H. O. Havemeyer, who, by the way, is supposed to be worth $30,000,000, and finely set up. When a choice was given him between college and business he elected for the latter, and ever since then he has been working as a clerk in his father's office.

No Use, Girls; He's Married.

H. H. Rogers Jr. is the son of the great Standard Oil magnate, whose wealth is estimated at $75,000,000. He is 26 years of age, dark, slight, a trifle above medium height, and with sparkling black eyes. He has a vivacious manner, and is fond of tennis and other outdoor sports, though not specially expert in any. He is married.

Another of our future multimillionaires, Ralph Pulitzer, who will inherit the New York World and a fortune not far from $10,000,000, was married recently to Miss Frederica Webb, a daughter of the Vanderbilts. He is a handsome young man, dark of complexion, a graduate of Harvard, and 24 years of age. He has not been brought up to be an idler, but helps his father in business matters and has an office in the World building.

The most popular of all the Rockefellerers is young William G., the eldest son of William Rockefeller, who, though poor compared with John D., is understood to be worth at least $75,000,000. He is tall, dark, and has charming manners. He entertains a good deal and has a fad for beagles, his favorite amusement being the hunting of rabbits. It is a fact worth mentioning incidentally that, for the sake of avoiding conspicuousness, all of the Rockefellerers in New York live on side streets, excepting only the father of this young man, whose house on Fifth avenue is exceedingly unpretentious.

John D. Jr. Is Unostentatious.

Everybody knows about John D. Rockefeller Jr., who is the only son of the richest man in the world. Born, as one might say, in the limelight, he cannot escape its glare, though a more quiet and unostentatious young man could not easily be found. He is thin, dark of complexion, studiously inclined, and afflicted with nervous trouble. Owning to the extreme respectability of his habits, and to his inclination for religion, he is frequently represented in the newspaper cartoons as wearing wings.

Ogden Mills, the expectant heir of D. O. Mills, and, therefore, the probable future owner of a fortune of something like $15,000,000, is now at the Harvard Law school. He does not mean to practice law, but needs the knowledge in order to equip him for looking after the interests of the great estate. His age is 24.

Another young collegian, a senior at Yale, is Stuyvesant Fish Jr., whose father's fortune is estimated at $8,000,000. He is good looking, an inch over 6 feet in height (inheriting his father's gigantic stature), and possessed of exceptionally charming manners.

Young Belmont Works in a Bank.

August Belmont Jr. is the heir to $20,000,000, notwithstanding which fact he works in his father's bank in New York, which represents on this side of the water the interests of the Rothschilds. He is a Harvard graduate, 24 years of age, and recently became engaged to a charming young lady, Miss Rosalie de Goleuria—a match of which August the elder heartily approves.

Robert L. Gerry is a nice looking man of 29, of medium height, and clean shaven. He is the son of Elbridge T. Gerry, who is supposed to be worth $20,000,000. Young "Bob" is a great "sport," and particularly of horses.

The greatest all round sport of all the young millionaires is William K. Vanderbilt Jr., who has made a dard-devil reputation at racing automobiles. Apparently, the desire to be in some other place at the earliest possible moment, whether he has any object in getting there or not, amounts to a disease with him, and his restlessness is so intense that at his country place on Long Island motor car and a yacht race are kept waiting for him at all hours of the day and night, ready to take him anywhere at a moment's notice. He is of slight build and a couple of inches under six feet in height, and wears a black mustache. When the family break occurred a few years ago, and his mother married O. H. P. Belmont, he took the side of his father (his brother Harold going with the mother), and he will undoubtedly inherit the bulk of the $80,000,000 which William K. Sr. has to leave.

J. P. M. Jr. Also Has a Wife.

J. Pierpont Morgan Jr. is a heavily built young man of medium height, with strong features, and a dark mustache. He is an only son, though he has several sisters. For a number of years past he has lived in London, where, being married, he maintains a handsome establishment. Like his father, he is a patron of the fine arts. Nobody knows how much J. P. Morgan Sr. is worth, but it is likely that $75,000,000 would not be far from the mark.

When the late William C. Whitney died he left only $3,000,000 to his second son, Payne Whitney, who, not long ago, married Helen Hay, daughter of the late secretary of state. This was probably was due to the fact that, at the time of Mr. Whitney's second marriage, the family of the first Mrs. Whitney was opposed to the match, and the boy Payne went to live with his grandfather, Oliver Payne, the Standard Oil millionaire. When the latter passes away, Payne Whitney doubtless will inherit the bulk of his fortune, which amounts to something like $40,000,000.

As a rule, these heirs to multiple millions, who are to be the rich men of the coming generation, are not idlers. Most of them are disposed to take life more or less seriously, and to undertake the business of existence on work-day principles—possibly realizing the fact that mere amusement, delightful as it may be for incidental purposes, is, as an occupation, the most wretched and unsatisfactory in the world.

The Good of Medicine.

People insisting that medicine does no good, have one stubborn fact to contend with, that is, the people who do believe are greatly in the majority. We have been so fortunate during the past 20 years as to convince thousands of sufferers with weak, watery blood, who had all the symptoms of a general breaking down of the system that one medicine, at least, does good. Nervous and unsteady people, weak, fleshless people, pimply, pale or sallow people, can have strong, steady nerves and solid healthy flesh by the use of Dr. Gunn's Blood and Nerve Tonic. A tablet to take at meal time, it turns the food you eat into rich, red blood, making solid flesh at the rate of 1 to 3 lbs. per week. Sold by all druggists for 75c per box, or 3 boxes for $2. This medicine saves doctor bills and insures health, giving the very best treatment possible.

A Puzzle In High Finance.

More or less comment has been caused by the developments which took place at the annual meeting held this week of the Southern Pacific company. Several changes occurred in the composition of the board of directors of this important railroad enterprise. It was to be expected that the representatives of what is known as the Gould interest would be dropped from the directorate of the Southern Pacific company, inasmuch as they are now engaged in building a line from Salt Lake City to San Francisco, under the title of the Western Pacific railway, which will be parallel and be a competitor of the Central Pacific line, controlled by the Southern Pacific. Similarly the resignation of representatives of the bank ing firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. of New York was understood, it having been announced by that firm some months ago that its members had decided upon a policy of abstaining from participation in the active management of railroad and other corporations. On the other hand, the fact that gentlemen connected with another important banking house—Speyer & Co.—who have heretofore held seats in the Southern Pacific board, were not re-elected has led to a good deal of talk. It is stated that the Harriman interest, which controls the Southern Pacific, has decided to have no more entangling alliances with bankers, and, on the other hand, that James Speyer and his associates are inclined to copy the example of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. in taking no active part in the management of corporations with which they may have to deal as bankers. At the same time the event has naturally been the cause of more or less surmise, it being felt that a new alignment of important financial interests in New York is under way, and that the matter might involve certain elements of rivalry which would be calculated to have a greater or less effect upon the general financial situation.—Bradstreet's.
