DISCUSSION OF LODGES.

Are lodges a curse or a blessing? This question is often argued and still lodges multiply. One of the freshest and most enjoyable magazine papers that have lately been printed in any of the American magazines is that in the April Atlantic upon "The Lodge" by Charles Moreau Harger. Mr. Harger, who is editor of the Abilene Reflector and professor of journalism in the University of Kansas, evidently knows the social life of the middle west to the ground, and writes of it most engagingly. He considers the place of the lodge in the social fabric of the country, its humor and pathos, and its potent place in the imagination of the average American. It is a paper which will be read by both insiders and outsiders with the keenest interest. The article in the Atlantic is readable, kindly and sympathetic.

NEW WEYMAN ROMANCE.

It is the story of an elopement with unusual consequences, for the girl marries not the man with whom she elopes, but the one from whom she flees. Henrietta Damer is her name. Reared by a baronet brother in rural seclusion, she becomes betrothed to a kinsman, Capt. Anthony Clyne—retired naval officer, landowner and widower. He imagines that she will make a proper mother for his motherless child. The romantic novelist invades the region of the lake ports, the Windermere region, selected by the villain on the eve of his expected marriage in the neighborhood of Clyne's estate; it is also the home of Bess, a dark woman of gypsy origin, who although affiliated with Waterson and his fellow conspirators, carries on a dismal intrigue with Tyson, the apothecary from her home at Starvecow farm. "Starvecow Farm" is written with a thorough mastery of dramatic art, in which suspense is the moving, dominant quality. Against this panoramic unfolding of plots and counter-plots and stirring incidents of human passion, pride and humiliation, justice and self sacrifice, is brought a historical background of a brutal yet humanely sympathetic country, England.

Smiles

Graft may be relied upon to protect graft. A new word has been coined in Oregon—"land-frauders." How rapidly the "I-was-its" change over into the "has-beens." The Portland "Made in Oregon fair" takes place in two weeks. Congress needs a little educational and moral influence injected into it. Corvallis now gets her electric juice at the same place her booze comes from Albany exchange. The nominees have their certificate of nomination from the direct primary.

Your Doctor

Ask your doctor how long he has known Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Ask him if he uses it himself, in his own family. Ask him if he can recommend anything better for throat and lung troubles, such as hard coughs and colds, hoarseness, bronchitis, weak lungs. Do as he says, at any rate. We are willing.

and now all they need is a certificate of character from the people. Creffeldism, like Dowicism and other isms, has gone its way. Beyond a power to deceive it has no power—if a power for evil can be called a power at all.

Medford Tribune: The Salem policeman who captured a man supposed to be the outlaw Smith in a refrigerator car only to find that the man was minus one of his feet by amputation, says he missed Smith by a foot. He certainly did not capture the prisoner because the latter had cold feet, notwithstanding his choice of a hiding place.

Not exactly a smile, but still some truth in it—from the Silverton Appeal: In these days of strife between two great political parties we must remember that, after all, we are just a band of brothers here on earth, traveling from the cradle to the grave. We live side by side, our children attend the same school, and after the smoke of the battle clears away we will still be friends and neighbors. Let the bitter things go unsaid. At best, life is short and we get out of it a full measure of sorrow.

An amusing exposure of "fake" newspaper illustration came in New York the other day. Mr. Hearst's evening paper issued a full page cut of the San Francisco fire, "taken on the spot by a staff photographer." The usual lurid accompaniments would have caused any thinking individual to doubt the authenticity of the picture, for photographers know it is almost impossible to secure a good negative of such a conflagration. In one corner of the half-tone appeared the announcement—overlooked by the artist and the engraver—that the picture had been copyrighted in 1900 by Mr. So-and-so of Frisco! Mr. Hearst's editors are now explaining by sawing wood.

Taxation Without Representation. When the colonies were taken by the English government without having representation in parliament, and when they were not only taxed without representation of the community, but had special taxes imposed upon them, which were not laid upon the people of England, they said justly: "Such taxation without being represented at all, without our needs, without our interests being represented in parliament, is tyranny."

Our forefathers objected to the taxation because it was unjust. Today women who are clamoring for suffrage have taken up the axiom of our forefathers and twisting it out of all recognition of its original meaning, have placed it on their banner as an incentive to strengthen their ranks.

And who are the women who make all the hue and cry about want of "representation" by taxpaying women? Are they the taxpayers? In very few instances. Should "representation" be claimed for all women because some women are taxed? Will it benefit the taxpaying women to have "representation" when by gaining that "representation" she has put as much power into the hands of thousands that will neutralize her "representation"? Today the man who holds taxable property and who contributes largely to the public coffers, has no more voice as to the amount of money to be raised or its expenditure than the man who pays no taxes at all. The vote of the ignorant and debased has as much weight in determining the policy of the government as that of the educated man, the man of business, or the man who has devoted his life to studying the problems of government.

The vote of the millionaire is worth no more than the vote of the pauper; and as the percentage of women with taxable property is vastly less than those without, how will the taxed women be benefited, should woman suffrage obtain? They will have nominal representation, but practically they will be more misrepresented than they are at present.

A taxpaying woman said: "I live in a small town and pay large taxes; next door to me is a man who pays very little. At every meeting called for 'improvements,' which means largely increased taxes for me, this man votes, and I have no choice. Is that right?" She was asked if the man was married, and if he had daughters over 21 years of age. She replied that he had a wife and three daughters. When she was asked if she thought her condition as a taxpayer would be improved when, instead of one "voice" against her interests, she had five, she confessed that she hadn't thought of that.

It is not, after all, so much a question of taxpaying women as it is of a body of women who are constantly seeking some change in the existing condition of things, and who use this "voiceless" cry, as we said before, as an incentive to other women. Taxpaying women do not care to vote. Many of them hold property in corporations, and they always place their proxy in the hands of some man to vote for them, or do not vote at all, and this nullifies the assertion that taxation without representation is tyranny.

A Mountain of Gold

European Crop Prospects.

European agriculture is again playing in hard luck. March was a bad month. In Great Britain, France, Holland, Belgium, Germany, and even in parts of Italy and Spain, temperatures have been at intervals about the lowest of the year.

Soil already saturated with excessive rainfall of winter has received further accessions of moisture over wide areas in the form of rain, snow, and hail. Spring sowings have been seriously retarded in some countries and are now much in arrears.

Autumn-sown cereals, however, are generally reported fair to excellent in condition, and the prospects for these important crops seem thus far to show few serious effects from conditions which theoretically would be deemed harmful. The season has opened under less satisfactory auspices than usual, and a prodigious period of favorable weather is necessary to overcome delays already incurred.

Everything indicates that the American farmer will enjoy a good European market for the surplus of the 1906 crop—Chicago Livestock World.
