

WHEREAS, THEREFORE, RESOLVED

What is all the Public Has Learned so far, From the Willamette Laundry

Just as was expected, the Ministerial Union, in its report on the expulsion of Professor W. P. Drew from the faculty of Willamette university, merely "resolved" and failed to go into any of the reasons for his dismissal. At the time the ministers were very indignant and were at once going to make of the expulsion a teacher of Greek and Latin a martyr of the Stephen brand. Rumors, however, kept coming to the clergy that it might be possible that there were other reasons for the professor's removal than his fight against saloons, and the strong ministerial protest drifted down to a set of resolutions regret. It seems almost another instance of the classical story of the floss of Mus.

The clergymen were two full hours in executive session discussing the matter and the result of their session was a draw, as follows: "Report of the Ministerial Union of the dismissal of Professor W. P. Drew from the faculty of Willamette university:

"Whereas, It has come to the knowledge of this union that Professor W. P. Drew has been dismissed from the faculty of Willamette university, and "Whereas, Professor Drew is a member of this union and has always taken active interest in all of its efforts for the promotion of the moral welfare of the city, doing all in his power to promote its righteousness, to suppress and banish its vices, by his courage and manly endeavors expelled the saloons to close their doors on Sunday, and this in such a manner and spirit as to compel the admission of friend and foe;

"Resolved, That we greatly regret the loss of Professor Drew from our union and grieve at his enforced departure from our city.

"Resolved, That in the removal of Professor Drew from our city the cause of civic righteousness loses one of its most leaders and advocates.

"Resolved, That we deeply deplore the dismissal from the faculty of Willamette university, where he is so popular with the student body, and where his great abilities and success as a teacher is conceded by all, and where his Christian life and influence have so marked and beneficial power over his scholars.

"Resolved, That we assure Professor Drew of our unbounded confidence in him as a teacher, our large respect for him as a man, and of our warm affection for him as a friend, and that all worthy citizens honor him for his sterling integrity, his genuine Christian manhood and his high ideals, and for what he has accomplished for the moral betterment of the city.

"Resolved, That these resolutions be printed in the local papers and a copy be given to Professor Drew."

It is not supposed that the Drew matter is by any means settled for all time.

It is very likely that the Methodist church will shy its pastor into the sea, and continual nagging will in perhaps smother out President Coleman and cause him to tell the real reason for the dropping of Professor Drew from the faculty.

It is rumored in the city that at the meeting of the board of trustees, President Coleman told the body that he had money to complete and organize a theological school and a fund of $100 in addition; but that if Drew remained, he—the president—would go and would take with him the theological school and the $7000 worth of sinners of war.

Drew's friends say that the bait was tempting and that the trustees did nothing but fire the teacher of Greek and Latin.

In the meantime the committee on the part of the board of trustees of the university is supposed to be investigating the charges against Professor Boyd, dean of the Normal school of the university, that were preferred against him by the student body, and the public awaits this report with bated breath.

OFFICE POSITIONS FOR GIRLS

(By Anna Steese Richardson.)

"I wish to secure an office position but have no knowledge of stenography, I cannot take a business course just now and I must earn some money. I am more than ordinary intelligent, have good references and make a good appearance. Can you suggest any line of work in which I can secure a foothold however unimportant?"

The girl who is more than "ordinary intelligent" will have the trial's common to all beginners in her efforts to secure a hearing, but once she has this, her advance is often more rapid than that of a girl who has been regularly trained in a business school for office work. The city is flooded with cheap incompetent, unlettered stenographers floating from one office to another. An intelligent and ambitious girl should be able to make her way by mere contrast.

The untrained office girl must accept the first opening she sees. This may be as a folder of circulars, an addresser of envelopes or any simple duties. Such positions are to be found with large publishing, advertising and insurance companies as well as in smaller establishments. They can be secured through the "want ad" columns, or by acquaintance with girls already employed in such concerns. The pay of a beginner is $5 or $6 a week, and the work is deady monotonous, but the intelligent girl will find some way of impressing her fitness for better work on her chief. A very pretty girl told me not long ago that she had been addressing envelopes for a publishing firm for two years and was becoming discouraged. She saw no advancement ahead. When I learned that she belonged to several dancing clubs, went to the theatre one or more nights each week and was not obliged to pay any board, but used all her small earnings for pretty clothes, I understood why she had never advanced. On the other hand, I know a girl who started at folding circulars, took private lessons in stenography at night, was promoted to the correspondence department and is now studying law with a prominent firm. It is not the start you have, but the way you work, that really counts.

The large insurance companies have long waiting lists. An applicant must state qualifications clearly, give references and then bide her time for an opening. Even here, acquaintance with other workers or heads of departments or sections is desirable. Insurance companies pay comparatively small salaries, but at the end of the year give a bonus of $100 or more to encourage continued service.

General office work includes folding, addressing and filing, which work pays at the first five or six dollars per week. Catalogue work pays about the same salary to beginners. Some firms employ a girl to hunt up letters in the files, and at this work a girl can quickly establish a reputation for accuracy and quickness. Mail order departments in the retail stores employ numbers of girls to send out samples or select goods for out-of-town customers. This work offers an excellent entering wedge for the untrained girl. Girls who have the gift of counting money and making change rapidly will find openings as cashiers in the department stores. But the girl who wishes to advance along clerical lines must study either bookkeeping or stenography at night, while she does more humble office work by day. Stenography is demanded universally in offices today.

Wisconsin Democrats for Bryan.

Milwaukee, June 27.—It has been announced on good authority that the Democratic state convention of Wisconsin, which opens here this morning, will declare itself for Bryan as the next Democratic candidate for the presidency. The Wisconsin Democrats are by no means silverites, but they seem to argue that the silver issue is dead and buried, and that, aside from that issue, Bryan is a safe man to be at the head of the nation.
