

LEAVES NO STONE UNTURNED

Minnesota's State Senator Makes Futile Plea to be Discharged

Herman W. Stone, a member of the Minnesota state senate, and president of the Swift County bank, in that state, who was indicted by the federal grand jury at the last session...

Senator Stone's lawyers claimed that a great mistake had been made in involving him in the "Michigan indictment." They contended that he had no connection with the alleged conspiracy...

The indictment against Stone is the same as that in which Edmund Dorgan, Francis J. Devine and John Joseph Collins, of Albany, are involved...

X-RAYS

The dispatches announce that Chauncey Depew has recovered. He certainly has recovered his nerve, and absolutely refuses to resign from the senate.

The Dallas Chronicle mentions a case of the suicide of one Johnson, a Swede, at a railroad camp on the North Bank. It says he had $250, which he lost in a card game, and soon after was found sitting on a bluff. If Johnson had retained his nerve and called the bluff, he might have saved his life.

Ex-Treasurer Lyman S. Gage has joined the theosophists. He may be able to project his astral body into space. If so the horse editor would loosen his grip on two-bits to hear the gentleman's opinion on 10 to 1, after the astral part of him located the material part.

Herman W. Stone, member of the Minnesota state senate, asserts that he is innocent of any connection with land frauds in Oregon, but Heney held to him in spite of his application for dismissal.

The linotype man and proof reader do give it to a poor devil of a reporter occasionally. The Baker City Herald man got his Tuesday, when he wrote a flowery notice about a band concert, and in the head line the "n" was left out, making it probably much nearer the strict truth, but still somewhat embarrassing—the head read "Bad Con-nect."

Johnson's Victor.

It is a long fight that Tom L. Johnson has made for good street car reform, but it is now drawing to a triumphant close. As usual the street car monopolists have let their golden opportunity go by. They have bagged and pettifogged just as their Chicago friends are doing now...

An impressive example of the mysterious and baleful power which Edmund Creffield, the late high priest of the "Holy Rollers," had over the minds of the victims of infamous doctrines of religion, appears in the vehement arraignment of the Seattle jury which yesterday acquitted George Mitchell of first degree murder in slaying the self-styled Joshua, by Mrs. Burgess E. Starr, sister of George Mitchell, who was yesterday acquitted of the murder of "Holy Roller" Creffield.

Baseball Players and Foot Racers!

Louis J. Kruger, ex-champion long-distance foot racer of Germany and Holland, writes, October 27, 1901: "During my training of eight weeks' foot races at Salt Lake City, in April last, I used Ballard's Snow Liniment to my greatest satisfaction. Therefore, I highly recommend Snow Liniment to all who are troubled with sprains, bruises or rheumatism."

SISTER'S OPINION OF BROTHER

Mrs. Starr's Statement Shows the Influence of Dirty Beast Creffield

"I certainly am disappointed in the verdict of the jury which tried my brother for the cold-blooded murder of Edmund Creffield. George Mitchell is no better than any other criminal who commits murder, and he should have been punished just like any other man. The trial was a farce, the verdict a travesty on justice. The witnesses for the other side all lied. The newspapers lied; so what could you expect?"

While she does not say in so many words that her brother ought to be hanged for his crime, the inference is plain from her statement regarding the outcome of the trial, made to a representative of the Telegram, at her home, 429 East Main street, this morning.

As soon as the reporter made known his mission, tears welled up in the eyes of the woman, whose home Creffield is supposed to have broken up; her lips trembled and her fingers clutched nervously at the doorpost against which she leaned heavily. Her two little children, big-eyed, curly-haired little girls, clung to her skirt, and looked up into her face, evidently wondering why there should be tears in their mother's eyes.

"They've all lied about Creffield," she burst out bitterly. "Only one side of the story has been told. Creffield and his friends kept silent under all the infamy and charges heaped upon him. He was too good and great a man even to answer his accusers. He did not make me leave my home. That's all a lie. One time I told him that I was unhappy and that I thought of going away, but he persuaded me to remain with my husband and children, and when I did go I left of my own free will and went to the coast to become a follower of Mr. Creffield."

"They just hounded him to death. George Mitchell and his friends had it all fixed up to kill Creffield. He knew it and he made no attempt to escape them. Oh, how they lied and lied about him! He never did the things they say he did, and he was vilified because people didn't know him, didn't understand him."

"What do you think of the verdict of the jury?" she was asked. For a moment she did not speak, using all her will power to restrain her tears. "Do you approve of it?" was the next question.

"She shook her head vigorously. "No, no; I don't," she exclaimed emphatically. "George Mitchell is no better than any other criminal who has committed murder. He should have been punished the same as any other man."

"Then you think he ought to be hanged, even if he is your brother?" "There is no brotherly or sisterly feeling between us any more. I say he should be punished just like any other man. There was no justification for the cold-blooded crime which he committed. He had no wrongs to avenge. My sister and I were fully responsible for our own acts, and it was none of George Mitchell's business (she always referred to her brother as George Mitchell—never as brother) what we did."

"Will 'Holy Rollers' flourish without him as a leader and prophet?" "No answer." "Is there any one to take up the work where he left off?" "Shaking her head sadly, she murmured in a husky whisper: "No man living can take Creffield's place."
