Regrets that President Roosevelt Won't Be There.

(Brooklyn Daily Eagle, Dem.)

Of course there never was the most remote possibility that President Roosevelt would preside at the Madison-Square meeting to welcome Mr. Bryan, but from the point of view of spectacle it is almost a pity that the thing could not have been managed. That combination of the two arch enemies of the plutocrats would have drawn into this town every middle-of-the-roadster who could raise the car fare any where from Kansas to Aroostook county Maine. On the night that Roosevelt shook hands with Bryan the breezes up and down Broadway would have surged and burgeoned with whiskers and the stout walls of Madison Square Garden might have been unable to resist the assault upon them of the multitudes eager to see the momentous spectacle.

Not being able to get the president, the welcomers have resorted to Tom Johnson, Alas, what a fall there was, my countrymen! Johnson would welcome Bryan anywhere and at any time, and the spectacle can not be counted on to draw largely outside the ten cent zone. Of the fervor of the welcome there can be no doubt, but one sentence in Johnson's letter of acceptance calls up memories. In that palladium of the people's liberties, Mr. Johnson speaks of "those of us who for nearly two decades have known and trusted and loved him."

Now, the fact is, that "nearly two decades ago, Tom Johnson was not a Populist nor a municipal reformer, to any conspicuous extent. In fact, he was, if not a plutocrat, vigorously striving to become one in this town of Brooklyn, by developing the Nassau street railway system. Later, when he had sold out that system for a good deal more than it was worth, and at a price that realized some, at least, of Johnson's ambitions for wealth, he had leisure and a bank account on which to devote himself to the woes of the common people. Since that happy stroke of high finance, Mr. Johnson has paid his devotions to Bryan publicly, and in the sight of all men. There is no desire here to suspect or impugn the sincerity of that devotion, but when Mr. Johnson puts the beginning of it "nearly two decades ago" he challenges local history. Madison Square Garden is, indeed, too near the old Flynn railroad routes to make the ceremony of the welcome of the leader of the anti-monopoly boasts and the champion of 3-cent fares a wholly impressive spectacle to men with long memories. The popular memory is very short, however, and the oratory of Mayor Johnson on that momentous night will be received with only less enthusiasm than that bestowed upon the hero of the homecoming.

Patent Medicines.

A man that compounds or invents something that is just a little better than the next best thing, is certainly entitled to the best share of the profits to be derived from the sale of the article. So he patents or copyrights to protect his interests. Patented goods are good goods, poor goods are never patented. We have twenty years of trial behind us to give us the assurance that we have the best medicine compounded for the cure of dyspepsia, sick headache, biliousness, indigestion and all stomach disorders. We protect the public as well as ourselves by keeping the formula a secret, as long as we make it we know it is made right and it cures these diseases. Druggists tell us that it is the one medicine that the sale is ever on the increase. To get the best remedy for dyspepsia or indigestion ask the druggists for Dr. Gunn's Improved Liver Pills, price 25c per box; only one for a dose.

Lively Times in Oklahoma.

Never before has a state newly admitted to the union started off with such good prospects as Oklahoma faces today. Larger in population than any of its predecessors at the time of their admission, it is also first in total of developed wealth. How vast is the agricultural feature of this rich commonwealth is vividly suggested by the fact that this year's wheat crop in Oklahoma alone, exclusive of Indian territory, will reach 30,000,000 bushels. The new state will thus at once take its place among the leaders in wheat production. Other crops are making new records. Adding the large live stock holdings of the farmers, the total wealth derived from the cultivation of the soil already exceeds that of many of the older states that have long been famous for their agricultural development. In the other half of the state—Indian territory—agricultural progress is also building large fortunes for thousands of farmers. The entire state is rich in minerals, and it possesses good forests. No American commonwealth has had a more fortunate material endowment.

The life of the new state is as active as its industry. Anticipating the organization of government under the statehood law, candidates are springing up on all sides, and the question of the location of the state capital has started a lively fight between rival towns. The law provides that the capital shall temporarily be at Guthrie until 1913, after which it shall be wherever the people of the state shall decide. Guthrie is fairly central to the entire state, and it seems to have a considerable advantage in its six years' possession of the official headquarters. But there are other active claimants, and as a solution of the difficulty it has been proposed that a healthful site on high ground than that occupied by Guthrie be selected and a new and ideal city, with parks and boulevards, be created thereon expressly to be the state capital.

This attractive project involves nothing new. Many of the western states located their capitals on sites selected partly because of their nearness to the geographical center and partly because of the successful work of real estate boomers. The selections have not always proved wise, and the capitals in many cases remain only villages built around the state buildings, with few of the conveniences of real cities. It is up to Oklahoma, if she undertakes it, to do the thing differently, and by selecting a site that will be commercially desirable, establish as her capital a great industrial and business center for the state. With her resources and the vast wealth already developed, the task is not too great and it would be a highly interesting experiment in city building.—Tacoma Ledger.
