Commercial Club Busy.
The Greater Salem Commercial Club met in the city hall last evening and decided to send two delegates to the National Irrigation Congress, which meets in Boise, Ida., September 3 to 8, inclusive. Those appointed to represent the commercial organization are Frank Davey and Judge John H. Scott. President Derby was also empowered to appoint five delegates to attend the meeting of the Oregon State Development League, to be held in Forest Grove the first week in September.

A communication was read from Tom Richardson, of the Portland Commercial Club, calling attention of the local club to the meeting of the State Development League, which is to be held during the state fair, and asking the co-operation of the club for the success of that gathering. The idea was enthusiastically received and a committee appointed to make the necessary arrangements for that gathering, which promises to be of special benefit to Salem. The committee consists of President Frank Derby, I. A. Manning, George F. Rodgers, Col. E. Hofer, Judge J. H. Scott, H. B. Thielgen and F. A. Turner.

The proposition of oiling the streets came up for discussion, and, after views had been expressed on the subject a committee was chosen to investigate the cost and feasibility of oiling the streets of the city and to bring the results of the investigation before the city council for further action. The committee consists of Judge Scott, I. A. Manning and George F. Rodgers.

A verbal report from Secretary-Turner showed that there is about $200 in the treasury. A canvass of the members is made for the collection of back dues, and a neat sum will be forthcoming from that source.

The following resolutions, offered by Col. E. Hofer, were passed unanimously:

Resolved by the Greater Salem Commercial Club that this organization appreciates the importance of the meeting of the State Development League, to be held at Salem during the state fair week, and the special committee of this club appointed at this meeting is hereby instructed to communicate with the officers of the State Development League, and assure them of the most cordial co-operation of this organization in making the coming session of the state development league the most successful in its history. A cordial invitation is hereby extended to all commercial clubs in the state to unite with us on the above occasion. They will find a hospitable reception awaiting them by the officials of the state fair and the people of the Capital City.

Secretary Turner stated that he had from time to time received lists of names from the Seattle Commercial Club containing the names of prospective immigrants to the Willamette valley, and to Salem in particular. These lists are gone over carefully and literature is sent to the parties making inquiries, and will eventually prove of benefit. Mr. Turner also stated that he recently got a list of names of persons who wish literature concerning the Klamath country. He forwarded these names to the Klamath Falls board of trade, and has received a letter from that organization thanking him for the kindness extended. Thus the work of the Development League goes on throughout the state.

Stealing a Crocodile.
Solomon Kraus tried to steal a crocodile from a circus which was performing at Budapest.

There were several of the reptiles in a cage, into which Kraus broke at night, and he selected one four and a half feet long.

The crocodile resented removal and fastened his teeth in Kraus' arm and held him until his cries attracted the attention of the staff, when he was arrested.

VALUE OF CASTLE ROCK

When the 12 men composing the jury in the case of the Portland & Seattle Railway Company vs. Charles E. Ladd, et al., of Portland, heard the last of the evidence submitted yesterday at Stevenson, Washington, in the Castle Rock condemnation suit, they adjourned to the jury room and returned a verdict in favor of the Ladd interests for $5000, instead of from $100,000 to $500,000, as the defendants alleged the damage would be. Not being willing to give up without a further struggle, the defeated capitalists gave notice of a motion for a new trial.

The owners set up in the hearing just closed that they intended to raze the mighty landmark. It was to be reduced by means of giant powder and other explosives and loaded into barges and sold to the highest bidder. The Portland & Seattle desired a right of way for its line between the rock and the river, but if this were allowed, the defendants asserted, it would forever preclude any possibility of quarrying being done, for the rock could not be blasted, owing to the close proximity of the railroad; nor could any part be transported from the quarry across the right of way to barges.

Witnesses for the railroad company testified that the construction of the road and future operations would damage the property but slightly and not detract from its value as a commercial or scenic object. While a motion for a rehearing of the case may be allowed, it is a consensus of opinion that the verdict will be similar, though the amount of damages may be reduced.

Previous to the condemnation suit the state of Washington petitioned the Skamania county superior court for a permanent injunction restraining the Ladds from destroying the rock, it being shown that the pinnacle was more valuable for its historic and scenic value than for commercial purposes. The injunction was not issued for some reason, and the owners proceeded with the work of drilling holes in the face of the rock.

The fact that the material to be quarried is said by expert quarrymen to be the same class of rock that can be found at many points on the Columbia caused the impression to prevail that the Ladd interests merely inaugurated operations there and circulated the story that the landmark was to be razed for the purpose of obtaining a bid for its preservation. Local societies, including the Woman's Club and other organizations, besides others in the Northwest, adopted resolutions protesting against the proposed vandalism, and those responsible for the scheme were characterized in no complimentary terms.

Victor Point Items.
The extreme heat of last week has ripened the grain very fast. Some of our neighbors will begin cutting next Monday.

Waldo Circle attended the dedication exercises of the new W. O. W. hall at Silverton on the 14th, and were royally entertained by the good neighbors of that place. The hall is a thing of beauty, and the Camp and Circle are to be congratulated upon having such a delightful place to hold their meetings.

Henry Patten, the "scrapper of Victor Point," who met his Waterloo so desecratedly at the hands of Adolph Heister, at the W. O. W. picnic on May 26th, has returned from Castle Rock, Washington, where he went for his health immediately after the incident referred to above.

Teddy Small has a badly mashed foot, caused by dropping a wagon tongue on it. The little fellow is unable to walk.

Mrs. J. A. Hunt has been suffering from neuralgia of the stomach for several days past.

Government Loans Called In.
Washington, December 20.—Today is the last day of grace for the return to the United States treasury department of the call loans which the government made to various banks throughout the country last March to relieve the stringency of the money market. The whole loan placed by the treasury department was $10,000,000, scattered throughout the country. When placed with the banks, for which municipal and other first-class securities were accepted at the time as collateral, it was with the understanding that the government would recall the loans about July 10. To avoid embarrassment to the banks, however, Secretary Shaw allowed the banks ten days grace. Nearly all the loans are reported to have been returned during the last few days.

ELEPHANTS IN THE SNAKE

Rubber Colored Pachyderms Take a Disastrous Swim in Oregon Waters

In the Idaho Falls Post there appears the following detailed story of the recent stampede of five circus elephants at Idaho Falls, which jumped into the Snake river and narrowly escaped drowning.

History was made about 4 o'clock Friday afternoon when five of the big elephants belonging to the Sell Floto shows were carried by the waters of the snake river under the old Anderson bridge. According to the old timers this is the first instance where an animal of any kind—not excepting man—has been carried through the channel of the Snake at this point and come out alive.

After the elephants were through with their part in the afternoon performance of the circus, they were taken out by their keepers and allowed to wallow and play in the waters of the canal just east of the show grounds. Being a well behaved herd and always under control, only one assistant remained in charge, he being on the west side of the canal. Suddenly the elephant's climbed up the east bank and started off to run in a northeasterly direction, toward the Snake river. The calls of the keeper failed to stop them and after making their way to a point on the bank where the lava bed is low, five of the six plunged into the water, only the biggest one, "Mamma," remaining on the shore. The five huge pachyderms were swept like straws by the rushing current of the river.

By this time a large number of circus employes and interested spectators were in pursuit, and one of the huge animals was assisted from the water at a point where the river turns into the stretch where the bridge is located. The other four were carried through this narrow channel, which is reputed to have no bottom, as sounding has never revealed one. Spectators who were familiar with the river and its history expected the circus to lose the majority of its herd, but the pachyderms wallowed and rolled and although completely covered with water they did at times come near enough to the surface to stick their trunks out to get air. They were carried quite a distance in this manner, but were rescued, mostly through their own efforts, at the point below the railroad bridge where the "dry bed" enters the river.

The elephant first taken out was chained to a rock behind the postoffice, and as the others were brought up the herd again broke loose, three of them again plunging into the river, and the other coming down town.

Of the three that plunged into the river, one was gotten out at the place of entering, and two were again taken through the channel, and one was recovered at the same point as previously, having each time been carried several hundred yards. Alice, the largest of the three and the one to swim in near the smooth lava rock opposite the flour mill, endeavored to get hold of some projection with her trunk, but failing, and nearly exhausted, pulled away from it, and as she struck the current turned over two or three times. She was in the main channel of the stream and it tossed and rolled her about as it would a bubble. The beast was immersed, save the top of her head, and occasionally that would disappear, but at regular intervals the trunk was shot out of the water for a fresh supply of air and she continued to drift and swim about in battling the treacherous current of the dangerous river until she reached the edge of the rapid on the right bank of the stream opposite the ice house, where she managed to secure foothold, and, all but played out, crawled slowly to the land, apparently having had more than enough fresh water bath for this season.
