STREAK OF HARD LUCK

A dispatch from Medford, Or., Monday says W. R. McKissick was killed while attempting to climb upon a moving freight train in the Medford yard yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock, his body being literally ground into fragments.

McKissick was a miner working in the Blue Ledge mine. Coming home unexpectedly he found a man named Law interfering with his domestic relations. Saturday he attacked Law, and chased him down Seventh street in Medford, and threw a rock at him in front of the Nash hotel. Yesterday McKissick swore out a warrant for the arrest of Law, and had the chief of police at Grants Pass hold him. It is supposed he was attempting to board a moving freight train to go to Grants Pass to have the warrant served, as the regular passenger train was late.

The warrant was found on the mutilated body after his death.

The dead man's legs were cut off, his head crushed and his brains in a pool in the dust, and it was necessary to gather up the remains in a basket.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured
 By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, fee.

IS THERE A UNIVERSAL SOLVENT

(Technical World Magazine.)

Chemistry has proved that the 80 elements are not independent, ultimate things. Astronomy and chemistry together have rendered it probable that all the elements are simply stages in the evolution of matter from simple into complex forms, the organic life which exists on the earth being simply the later end of this process of evolution from the simplex toward the complex. Physics has found a way of producing out of ordinary atoms minute cathode ray particles which are much smaller than atoms, and has also found that certain of our heaviest elements are in the very act of spontaneously transmuting themselves into simpler forms. To our first question, then, as to whether the elements are transmutable in the laboratories of nature, we may return the answer that certain of them, at least, are transmutable; and it is probable that in nature's laboratories all of them are produced from some simple, primordial stuff.

Can man effect the transmission? Thus far he has indeed learned how to obtain cathode ray particles from any of the forms of matter; but he has not learned how to produce by any of the agencies at his command any of the 80 recognized elements from any other. He has caught nature in the very act of doing it herself; but none of the agencies now known to the chemist or to the physicist appears to be able either to accelerate or to retard the process—that is, to change in any way the rate at which radio-active substances are spontaneously transmuting themselves into other substances.

Assuming that a proper admixture of their old element, fire, would produce any desired transformatoin. But unfortunately the temperatures required to produce these changes are probably forever beyond man's reach. The relative little changes which we are able to produce on earth have no measurable effect at all upon the transmutations which uranium, radium or thorium are undergoing. Although, then, our modern science has opened out before us a view which the ancient alchemists never had of the wonderful operations going on in nature's laboratories, we are at the present day just as impotent as they in the face of the problem of the transmutation of any element into any other element. If the secret of this transformation should ever be found we should be able to unlock almost infinite stores of energy which we now know to be wrapped up in the atoms of the elements. Curie proved, in 1903, that the disintegration of a gramme of radium liberates at least 300,000 times as much heat energy as is evolved in the combustion of one gramme of coal. Furthermore, it is extremely probable that similar enormous quantities of energy are locked up in the atoms of all substances. J. J. Thomson estimates that enough energy is stored up in one gramme of hydrogen to raise 1,000,000 tons through 100 yards. It is not improbable that it is the transformation of this subatomic energy into heat which maintains the temperature of the sun. Should man ever be able to unlock this energy he would doubtless look back upon the day in which his progenitors burned coal to warm their houses and to drive their engines with the same curiosity any pity with which we look back upon the day when our naked ancestors ploughed their fields with a crooked stick and lit their fires with the spark from a flint.
