NOT A DULL DAY.

Not a dull day of trade this summer is what Journal advertisers report.

REASON: STREET IMPROVEMENTS, ROAD BUILDING, ELECTRIC LINE EXTENSION.

When labor is employed all share in the prosperity.

Salem has only begun to get the benefit of the forward expansion movement. It will become yet ten times stronger.

When the Oregon electric is extended to the north end of the county; when the line to Falls City is built; when the electric road reaches Melama; watch Salem grow.

With the Harriman lines rebuilt; with sawmills running day and night; with larger employment funds all around; THERE IS ONLY CONTINUOUS PROSPERITY IN SIGHT FOR SALEM.

BEAUTIFUL AUTUMN.

In many ways the autumn time is the most beautiful season. All has a satisfying expression of ripeness, maturity, abundance.

The gold and brown of the stubble fields, the dark green forests, the hazy atmosphere. NOW BEAUTIFUL.

There are many trees, as oak, ash and willow that sway in the wind, like waves of silver.

The sun hangs a mellowing screen of mist over it that lends to the landscape a sort of magical perspective.

The early-cut fields have a summer of green shining through the yellow.

Back of the fir trees in the skyline on the hills is a transparent haze of blue.

Along the streams the trees begin to color. Yellows and reds begin to appear in masses of tint.

Down the forest aisles the sun is beginning to hold its annual street carnival of colors.

There are harvests of bright hues, symphonies of color, music that is heard by the eyes and seen by the soul. THE GLORIES OF AUTUMN ARE UPON US.

OIL THE RESIDENCE STREETS.

Such streets as State and Twelfth street, from the M. E. church to the Southern Pacific depot should be oiled.

Such a street as Liberty street, from State to the fair grounds should be oiled.

Paving petitions are under headway on the business parts of State, Court and Commercial streets. DO NOT LET OIL TALK BE USED TO DELAY OR SIDETRACK ANY PERMANENT IMPROVEMENT.

A petition is ready for action to put a crushed rock improvement on North Commercial street, from Chemeketa to the creek.

ALL IT IS WAITING FOR IS THE COMPLETION OF SOUTH COMMERCIAL STREET.

Mayor Waters has stuck to street paving like a dog to a root.

He has shown great determination to accomplish results under difficulties.

But let us not be caught switching away from permanent improvement with oil talk.

Put oil where it belongs—on driving streets, boulevards and residence streets.

Cotton-Stalk Fiber Paper.

Mr. Harvie Jordan, president of the Southern Cotton Association, in an article prepared for and published by the Manufacturers' Record of Baltimore, declares that the manufacture of paper from the fiber of the cotton stalk is one of the latest and most interesting inventions of the new century.

It has been unquestionably demonstrated that all grades of paper, from the best form of linen grade to the lowest, can be manufactured from cotton stalks. In addition to this, a variety of by-products, such as alcohol, nitrogen, material for gun cotton and smokeless powder, can also be secured.

Aging Brandy in a Jiffy.

According to a report from Consul Paul Nash of Venice, Professor Martinotti of the Royal Oenological station of Eati, recommends the following method for the artificial aging of brandy: Ordinary brandy, before being bottled, is aged by keeping for the requisite length of time in small oaken casks.

Pointed Paragraphs.

An empty purse is no evidence of an empty head.

One way to get out of a tight place is to sober up.

No man approves of flirting—unless he is on the deal.

There will come a thrashing time for those who sow wild oats.

A woman isn't necessarily smart because she says things that smart.

Only the magician's wife doesn't care if her husband is tricky.

Few men who make fools of themselves can refrain from advertising the fact.

Necessarily the man who leaps before he looks doesn't take much stock in the theory that procrastination is the thief of time.

OPEN PUBLICITY THE BEST GUARANTEE OF MERIT.

When the maker of a medicine, sold through druggists for family use, takes his patients fully into his confidence by frankly and fearlessly publishing broadcast as well as on its bottle wrappers, a full list of all its ingredients in plain English, this action on his part is the best possible evidence that he is not afraid to have the search light of investigation turned full upon his formula and that it will bear the fullest scrutiny and the most thorough investigation.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for the cure of the weaknesses, periodical pains and functional derangements of the organs distinctly feminine, is the only medicine put up for sale through druggists for woman's special use, the maker of which is not afraid to take his patients into his full confidence by such open and honest publicity.

A glance at the published ingredients on each bottle wrapper, will show that it is made wholly from native, American, medicinal roots, that it contains no poisonous or habit-forming drugs, no narcotics and no alcohol—pure, triple-refined glycerine of proper strength being used instead of the commonly employed alcohol, both for extracting and preserving the active medicinal properties found in the roots of the American forest plants employed.

NEW YORK FASHION LETTER

New York, Aug. 18.—Perhaps for no function are customs more conservative than for weddings; changes there may be, to be sure, but they lie along the lines of minor detail and even individuality has little chance to express itself; and for so public an occasion it is considered better taste to make no startling innovations.

The preparations that are now going on for a September wedding of a fashionable young woman is an example of the best customs at present in vogue for that eventful day. This bride intends to get married in church as most brides now-a-days favor the seclusion, solemnity and sacredness of a church wedding and few of the fashionable weddings are taking place in the home; moreover, if there are to be many guests, so many preparations are already taking place at the house for the luncheon and entertainment of the guests that the church ceremony takes a lot of care away from the home and saves room for other features.

At a church wedding the bride may be dressed in the regulation wedding dress, or a handsome cloth costume and hat, or the travelling dress. Although so many beautiful white materials are now in the market, brides still cling to white satin and if there is some old lace in the family, her costume is complete. For the satin wedding dress there is no style at present in vogue that is better adapted to its construction than the Princess, which, if the figure be at all good has its best points emphasized. A handsome gown made of cream satin, effectively garnished with lace, had nine gores followed in its construction which follows closely the lines of the figure, falling in ripples about the feet.

A back closing is arranged above. The body is cut out to accommodate the lace tucker and a plain or fancy collar finishes the high neck; and a deep lace bertha adds a distinctive touch. In place of the bertha a lace bolero with rounding edges is sometimes used. The short sleeves are shirred at the seams and under the cuffs, which are turned back under the elbows, long pointed lace wrist cuffs are extended. The train measures from waist line to lower edge about two yards and a half. From under a small coronet of orange blossoms is fastened a long net or tulle veil, or if the bride has an old lace veil, she is in luck.

If a less expensive dress is wished, some of the pretty white silks, all-over laces and lace wedding dresses is liked just now—some of the fine white woollen goods are even used, also white silk organdies, muslins, etc., over silk foundations.

A bride who felt that she must have a real wedding dress, yet could not afford a satin, shows a pretty piece of China silk with lace for ornamentation. Princess fitting was used with five gores, which were gathered or shirred at the top with a facing about the bottom. A fitted lining gives a foundation for the full waist and an invisible closing is made at the back. A tab yoke is inserted, topped by a standing collar and outlined with small lace medallions which also finish the lower edge of the yoke. Gathers or shirring may regulate the fullness of the body portion at the upper and lower edges. The sleeve linings are faced to the wrists and is made with three graduated puffs and lace cuffs. The bottom of the skirt was decorated with groups of tucks between which groups was a band of lace medallions. A fine tulle veil under a wreath of orange blossoms and white gloves completed the costume.

In shoes there are some beautiful ones in white satin embroidered in white silk in pattern or orange blossoms in the real shades, others again have rose buds, or lilies of the valley or orchids.

In the late weddings the shower bouquet was not often seen, but the flat English bouquet was in evidence, also the round bouquet surrounded with dark green foliage. It may be of any flower that the bride prefers so long as it is in white though roses are extremely popular. In those of the bridesmaids some color may be shown and if there is a color scheme either individually or in the group to be carried out, the bouquets should be in harmony.

A gown of veiling in Queen's grey trimmed with Irish crochet lace and silk bands, consisting of skirt and waist would be a pretty costume for a reception dress, which might have been used as a wedding dress of the bride had wished to be married in a cloth costume. The skirt was a seven-gored model with inverted plait effect over the gores, falling about the feet where three graduated bands of grey silk formed the decoration; scattered over the gores were occasional bowknots of ribbon, grey, embroidered in tiny rosebuds stitches. The waist had a square yoke of fancy outline in lace edged with a band of grey silk. The sleeves were of the full elbow length, having a lace cuff below bands of the silk. A silk belt completed the costume. A hat that could be worn with this gown could be made of grey chip, adorned with a cream lace scarf, a grey ruche in the back, a wreath of pink roses around the crown and a white aigrette at the left side.

The traveling suit should be a simple affair. One of the new soft mohairs of the chiffon variety could be used, as for suits this material is particularly favored; but for blouse should be of taffeta or crepe de chine, or some other more pliable goods that drapes and blouses softly, which, even in the newer weaves mohair does not do. Make the skirt with the new circular sides and the inverted box plait in the back and front with, perhaps, a trimming of mohair braid or bias bands of taffeta. The coat should be short with a narrow waist-coat of silk, and braided to match the skirt.

Another costume that is particularly effective and would be stylish for church, luncheons, or afternoon calling, is one of rajah silk made in a walking length, that is, that just escapes the ground. This should be a skirt with long lines in plaits, tunic mode, or the Princess without the high corselet. A little bolero should be provided as these jackets are a feature of the season. One of the newest has a shaped band around the lower edge into which all fullness is gathered, which is extended in fancy outline up the front and around the neck into a pointed back.

For the mother of the bride silk in Queen's grey would be appropriate made with a slight train and trimmed about the bottom of the skirt with bands; a slightly draped waist giving an Empire effect below a lace yoke and collar; puff sleeves with slashed cuffs having falls of lace, and a narrow pointed girdle would complete the costume.

For the other costumes there are the lingerie modes, such as tea gowns, matinees, kimonos, dresses, suits, etc.; the morning street costume, the afternoon house-gown, the morning shirt-waist costume; plain skirt for sports and shirtwaist suitable to go with it, a few odd skirts, one of cloth and one of silk, a few linen suits an evening dress and, last but not least, the coat; raincoat, a jaunty short jacket and a long-sleeved Eton. Some of these adjuncts of the outfit the bride may already have, which with a little renovating will do good service through the winter, and the more may be saved for those other additions, such as belts, collars, gloves, etc., without a good supply of which no woman's wardrobe is complete.

Bridesmaids' gowns are made of the picturesque order. For the September wedding when the morning air is apt to be crisp and cool nothing could be prettier for the four bridesmaids—the usual number—than lace gowns made over silk, and Directoire coats of taffeta silk with hats of the same period in which the first show of difference in color is displayed for each maid, as the dresses and coats must be of the same shade. The maid of honor may have a more elaborate costume, but it is essential that it be in harmony with the other gowns. The little flower girls would better have silk organdy dresses and big choux of white ribbon on the hair, one at the nape of the neck, and the other on the crown of the head.

If the wedding is severely simple there need be but one bridesmaid—a relative or very dear friend, or there may be none in exceptional cases; but never more than six.

Again for an autumn wedding gowns made with the Empire bolero would be stylish and useful for other occasions. Veiling, chiffon, taffeta and voiles would work up well into princess dresses for a simple "white wedding," or, if the bride should wear a cloth suit, chiffon broadcloth, in some darker contrasting color, would be effective, made with a circular skirt, high girdle and bolero costume.

Gold and silver belts are still worn, provided they are not too cheap a variety.

Buckles are mostly in quite elaborate designs.
