CLAMS SNAKES RABBITS

Some of the Products of the Great Inland Empire Across the Range

Few people will believe that the editor of the Record has had several messes of fresh clams that were caught right in Merrill. But such is the case. The bed of Lost river is full of fresh water clams and they are pretty good eating, too. All one has to do to secure a mess is to take a long handled rake, stand on the bank and rake them out—Merrill Record.

Dr. H. F. Coulter had a narrow escape from being bit by a rattlesnake Monday. He had walked down the track two or three miles and turned and slowly returning when a blast on the opposite side of the river attracted his attention. Starting on again he glanced down and saw the snake coiled in front of him. He had a newspaper in his hand and the snake struck the paper. The doctor found a club and killed the snake. It had nine rattles and a button. It was the doctor's first encounter with one and he will preserve the rattles as a relic.—Arlington Record.

Another rabbit drive on Blalock Island is to come off soon, under direction of that prince of good fellows—Dr. M. G. Blalock. The island is about six miles long and one mile wide. The drive will be over the entire length of the island. Each man will be armed with a club and the rabbits will be slaughtered as they are driven from their cover. It is expected that over 100 men will participate in the drive, of whom a number will be from Seattle, Tacoma, Walla Walla and Spokane.—Observer.

SHAW FARMERS PROSPER

J. B. Craig, of Shaw, was in the city today, and reports that about one week more will clean up the threshing in that neighborhood. Grain is of a good yield and a good quality, the best in several years. The prune crop will be large, but fruit of medium size, owing to long dry spell. Hops are fairly good. Many of the farmers are selling their oats from the machine at 28 cents. There is no disposition this year to form a pool, as it makes a great deal of work for a few men, while all get the benefit, but are not willing to pay anything. The farmers about Shaw are generally prosperous.

X-RAYS

John Leland Henderson, Hood River's he-mermaid, could not propel his sylph-like form fast enough to keep up with the sinewed, and sinuous Byrnes. The horse editor has a few nickels that John L. can out-talk the other fellow.

While the president is "perfecting" the English language the horse editor offers the suggestion that in speaking of the Panama canal and its management that the spelling be changed to "canaille."

The Oregonian says: "Look out for rain September 10. State Fair and hop picking will then be in full swing." This is an off year—most of the rains having visited the arid regions south of us. Anyway, "don't worry, smile."

A corporation is an artificial person without a soul to be d—d, or a body to be kicked, an incorporeal nonentity, a chimera, a penumbra, an intangible creature of the law, an imaginary appurtenance to things real. Its officers are its brains and do its thinking for it, direct its movements, control its actions. Yet they cannot be punished, because the thing that does not exist commits the crime. Verily our judges and law makers are slopping over with wisdom.

MUTUAL CANNERY EXPANDS

Two Additional Wings Being Erected to the Fruit Packing Plant

When the season for canning pears began, a week ago, business at the Salem Mutual Cannery assumed such immense proportions that it was at once necessary to enlarge the plant. A few days ago workmen were hurriedly got together and a shed for storing fruit 40 by 30 feet was erected. This proved inadequate, and 20 men are working today on another shed 50 by 75 feet in size. In the meantime pears are packed all over the place, and the management is working as many people as can find room to move about in the cannery.

Pears are coming in rapidly, the warm weather causing them to ripen very fast, and after as many are canned here as the capacity of the plant will admit, the remainder are shipped to the Portland factory.

SWAM THIRTY MILES.

Remarkable Escape From Death of a Nervy Hawaiian.

Edward Duvauchelle, of Molokai, is the hero of a most remarkable story of human courage and endurance, and of a marvelous escape from death. The fact that he was one of the team that represented the national guard of Hawaii at the rifle shooting at Sea Girt, N. J., last fall, will perhaps add some interest to the tale of his thrilling experience.

Monday night, May 23, Duvauchelle, who is a fisherman living at Pukoo, on the southern coast of Molokai, with three native Hawaiians as companions left home in a whaleboat with a load of fish for Lahaina, about 12 miles away. They arrived there safely, sold their fish, and about 8 o'clock started in a dead calm to row back. A light breeze sprang up and they hoisted sail, making the sheet fast. A sudden squall capsized them before they could ease off the sheet. The boat became waterlogged and began drifting out to sea. They were at the time a mile or two from Kaanapali Landing, Maui. They made a float with four oars and the mast and, with this to help them, two of the natives, at their own request, started to swim ashore to get help.

After waiting their return for three hours in vain, Duvauchelle and his remaining companion, Dan Pawaa, came to the conclusion that the men had failed to reach the shore by swimming. They made a float of the boom and gaff and all that was left of the oat's gear and started. The current carried them in the direction of Napili, and they were able to gradually make their way toward the shore. When within half a mile of it they discovered, to their consternation, that the current was setting against them, and that in spite of all their efforts they were drifting further away—this time in the direction of Molokai, which seemed to them to be about ten miles distant. They therefore made up their minds to swim toward the shore of that island. They seemed to be making considerable headway, and by sunset were, as near as could be judged by the line of breakers on the reef, four or five miles from the shore.

They had moonlight until nearly midnight, when the moon set. By this time Dan Pawaa was becoming exhausted and could hardly keep himself afloat. Thereupon Duvauchelle gave up the float to him entirely, placing him in the middle of it, and he himself swam without the assisting buoyance of the float. When about 500 yards from the shore of a little rocky inlet, about a mile from the Molokai coast Pawaa was overcome with exhaustion and, bidding Duvauchelle goodbye, dropped from the float, sunk and never arose. Duvauchelle succeeded about an hour later in reaching the rock and dragging himself, wounded and bleeding, beyond reach of the waves, where he fell asleep from exhaustion, not awakening until past noon the next day. Then he swam to the Molokai shore, a mile away, and made his way home.

When he started on his swim he had taken off his shirt, as it was a hindrance in swimming, but had kept his trousers on, so that the white skin of his legs would not attract the sharks which infest these waters. He was terribly tormented while in the water by small crabs, which fastened themselves to the skin of his
