Ask your doctor how long he has known Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Ask him if he uses it himself, in his own family. Ask him if he can recommend anything better for throat and lung troubles, such as hard coughs and colds, hoarseness, bronchitis, weak lungs. Do as he says, at any rate. We are willing.

PURE FOOD LAWS.

"Regulations" Causing Manufacturer Much Tribulation.

(S. F. Chronicle.)

The regulations for the labeling of food products now in course of preparation are likely to cause great tribulation to large numbers of manufacturers. A conference is in session in New York city between the packers or dealers and representatives of the department of agriculture, for the purpose of deciding upon the final form of the regulations for the enforcement of the pure food laws, and they are striking many snags. If a product contains two ingredients—say honey and glucose it would be "misbranded" if labeled either honey or glucose. The label must state precisely what article it covers. For example, suppose that "Boston baked beans" would be a misbranding if the label covered both pork and beans, as we believe it invariably does.

But the question arose in the conference whether "Boston, baked beans" can be sold at all, unless, as a matter of fact that are "Boston baked," which we suppose is rarely the case in the canned article usually found in the stores. The law forbids the use of any geographical name in such a way as to mislead buyers as to the actual source of the product. Maryland peaches cannot be sold as "California" peaches. That is just, for the term "California" as applied to fruit products has obtained, at the expense of the people of this state, a commercial value which other states ought not to be allowed to steal. The term "Boston," however, as applied to baked beans, does not indicate a quality of any kind which is peculiar to Boston, or would that city, apparently, offer any loss whatever, but rather the benefit of an advertisement, for all the baked beans put on the markets of the world, were labeled "Boston baked beans." And yet, as appears under the law, the term "Boston" cannot be applied to any baked beans which were not either grown or canned in that city. In fact, the "tentative" regulations forbid the use of any geographical name whatever when it bears no relation to the place of manufacture. Now that rule, if adopted, will affect the wine trade is yet to be seen. The manufacturers of "champagne" produced by the natural process have protested against allowing that name to be used for wines artificially charged with carbonic acid gas and which are now sold under the enticing name of champagne. The rigid interpretation of the law may also be held to exclude the use of foreign geographical names to designate certain types of wine as "Burgundy," "Sherry," and even "champagne" itself. A recent French law forbids the sale as "champagne," in France, of any wine not actually produced in the Champagne district, and in general the new French labeling laws are producing trouble in that country similar to that which our manufacturers are now experiencing. The fact that all trade everywhere is permeated with misrepresentation. The intent of our pure food law is to stop all misrepresentation in the sale of food products. The application of an inelastic rule is sure to compel many changes which are really unnecessary, and possibly some which will be quite inconvenient. There is no term except "Burgundy" for example, which represent a wine of a certain type, produced in all wine producing countries, and not for

The state library commission is providing special libraries for use by school children in debates and discussions. It is difficult for many schools to get the necessary books on "live" topics for the conducting of a good debate and to remedy this situation the commission is preparing to send out what are termed "debate libraries." All a school will have to do is to make application for the books, and pay the expressage each way. Lists of the subjects that are covered by these books are such as arbitration, Chinese exclusion, rural schools, direct legislation, convict labor, irrigation, etc.

A school board cannot prevent pupils from attending public amusements in the evening, in order that their school work may be more profitable to them. The attorney-general holds that the school authorities have control of the children relative to their habits and conduct during school hours, at recess time and while on their way to and from school, but parents have full control over their children the remainder of the time. The inquiry had been made by the state superintendent of
