We are in the midst of the Indian summer, the most beautiful time of the year. Society in the Capital city is just beginning to show itself, and the past week has had a number of pleasant offerings. Dan Cupid holds full sway and all ready the wedding bells have rung this month, and right merrily will they ring in the next three weeks, when three of Salem's charming daughters will be married. Society from now on will be gay, and if only the present brilliant weather keeps up, it will be a good accompaniment.

In Honor of Miss Fawc.

Among the pleasant events of the past week was the "China Shower" given by Miss Bessie Frisby, Thursday afternoon, at her home on Center street, in honor of Miss Moree Fawc, whose marriage to Mr. Claude Knight, of The Dalles, has been announced.

The house decorations were beautiful. Strings of red hearts, large and small, pierced with arrows, were effectively arranged, mingling with the tinted autumn foliage. Bowls of roses and sweet peas were also used. In keeping with the occasion "Hearts" was played at small tables, the prizes being captured by Misses Edna Knight and Lena McIntire. The score cards were red hearts, with a miniature picture of Miss Fawc, which will be a pleasing and lasting souvenir of the occasion.

A dainty luncheon was served later. The table decorations were in keeping with the heart scheme, the centerpiece being a large red heart, filled with scarlet geraniums. Red candles at either end of the tables, completed the artistic setting. Mrs. James Walton, Jr., of Portland, and Mrs. Ernest Wiggins assisted in the serving.

One of the most pleasing features was when Miss Charlotte Robertson came into the front parlor drawing a small white be-ribboned wagon, in which all the gifts were piled. This was taken to Miss Fawc, who then opened them. There were many and beautiful pieces of china which will ever remind her of her girl friends here.

Those present were: Misses Moree Fawc, Eileen Fawc, Blanche Fawc, Edna Knight, Cecelia Haines, Della Briggs, Zoe Stockton, Lenna Cavanagh, Chrissie Clarke, Grace Ripman, Lena McIntire, Nettie Frasure, Cora Talkington, Mrs. Mulkey, Mrs. Ernest Wiggins, Mrs. James Walton, Jr., of Portland, Mrs. Henry Fawc, and little Charlotte Robertson.

Hurlburt-Rhodes Wedding.

A pretty home wedding occurring this week was that of Miss Pearl Rhodes, of this city and Mr. Thomas Hurlburt, of Shaniko, which took place Wednesday evening at the home of the bride's father, on North Cottage street. The ceremony was performed by Rev. P. S. Knight, in the presence of relatives.

The house was decorated with a profusion of autumn foliage, interspersed with cut flowers. The arch under which the ceremony was performed was made of foliage and choice white roses. Gladiolus, arranged in jardiniere were placed in every available space. In the dining room smilax and white carnations were used. The bride's sisters, Misses Nora and Bertha, served the refreshments.

The bride wore cream silk crepe de chine with lace trimmings and carried an arm bouquet of bride's roses. She was unattended. She is a daughter of Mr. Paul Rhodes, of this city, and has scores of friends in this city. Mr. Hurlburt resides in Shaniko where he is bookkeeper in the Shaniko bank. After a brief stay in Portland the young couple will go to Shaniko to reside. They have the best wishes of their friends in this city.

*AN OREGON NIGHTINGALE.

*Faint as the whispering wind among the trees,
Soft as the tinkling ripples of the stream,
Or plaintive murmuring of the tropic seas,
Or haunting rhythm of a summer dream;
Clear, low and sweet; Aeolian melody,
Or song of lark, lost in the summer sky.
Then clearer, sweeter, stronger than before
The notes in liquid harmony outpour
As though a hundred mocking birds had joined
To try the store of music they'd purloined;
Or nightingale from out some jamed bower
Gave sound a fragrance sweeter than the flower;
Till all the wood with joyous music rings
And other songsters listen—while she sings.*

—J. H. CRADLEBAUGH.

NEW YORK FASHION LETTER

New York, Oct. 6.—It very often happens that the woman whose dress is absolutely up to date in itself is yet lacking in style, and if one investigates it in nine cases out of ten the fact is due to her indifference to the odds and ends, the accessories, the thumbs and threads that must be left to the after-buying yet of necessity must be in perfect harmony. It is the misfortune or ignorance of some women to always miss this harmony not only in color, but in their propensity for combining the old and the new to the disadvantage of both and their use of thing inappropriate. They will put together a new dress of the latest style and a hat two years old, they will wear with a new suit a frayed out shirt-waist or an old collar or a cleaned pair of gloves and very likely a pair of shoes that are run down at the heels. It is just such things as these that the French woman has made her reputation on for nice dressing. One to be well dressed must study the tout ensemble.

It costs money? Of course it does. But the woman who is working for the artistic effect of the whole appearance will take a little less expensive suit or dress that she may have these small belongings that mean so much to her air of smartness which compels our admiration at every meeting even though she may appear in the same costumes each time we meet her.

One of the faults of many a woman is the "buying of things promiscuous." She goes into a shop, she sees a purple hat and buys without even reflecting that she has not another article of dress that she can wear with it, and there are but two roads open to her then, to buy a whole suit to fit her hat or be an eye-sore to her friends for a whole season. Both courses may cost her many a pang before she gets through the winter.

The suit of dress must, of course, have the first consideration; and if you have fifty dollars for your dress allowance deduct from this amount what your new silk underskirt, shoes, gloves, shirt waist, belt, collar and tie, and hat are going to cost, which will probably be about twenty-five dollars. Perhaps you have one or more of these articles in good condition and if so that extra amount may be put on a second waist or the suit itself. With such planning you will not be so apt to come to that day as most of us have in the past, when among numberless odds and ends of clothing we could hardly make a decent appearance for ourselves. We do not need such quantities of things as we need things appropriate and harmonious to each other and the occasion.

If any woman has any trouble in getting a suit this fall it is from the many materials and styles she has to choose from rather than anything else. The grey suit is still popular and if not too light is especially serviceable for winter weather. Many of these suitings are lined or checked with an unobtrusive color line in green, red, black or even a darker or lighter shade of grey. When the contrasting shade is present it supplies the foundation for a nice color combination; while if the material is an all grey a plaid silk waist will give the necessary note of brightness, which may or may not be carried out in the hat. Another material that promises to be very popular this season is chiffon-broadcloth and a grey tinge showing blue shades will be a favorite, it gives one of those neutral tints with which different hats and waists of a brighter color look so well. Chevrons and serges in Hunter's green are having a special showing this autumn and, indeed, all the greens seem to be growing more and more popular as the season advances; and a dark green in broadcloth of the chiffon variety makes one of the most stylish of costumes, which may be made extremely plain by the use of machine stitching in a self-color, or elaborate as you please by the use of velvet and a decoration of the many beautiful braids now so popular.

Navy blue is another color that is much in evidence in the show rooms just now, and it is eagerly welcomed by many women for it is one of the most becoming and serviceable colors, we have, perhaps ranking next to black. Speaking of black, in contrast to its once great popularity women have now more and more a desire for the brighter colors, which is perhaps well for the majority as black is a most trying color to any woman with a clear complexion to which must be added bright cheeks to get the best effect.

In making of the tailor-made suit remember that the skirt must clear the ground by several inches, none of all the models from either the foreigner domestic makers, show the least tendency to come in contact with the ground. The majority of the skirts are made with inverted of box-plaits which are very narrow at the top and widen out at the bottom into a full flare at the feet. Now in the case of the skirt intended for the house or dressy wear in nearly every case I have found it made long, it lies on the ground in front and the sides and has a train in the back. The coats to the tailor suit should fit closely and perfectly to gain the best effect. They usually have a decoration of braid, while the coat or wrap to be worn over the dressy theater or reception dress is as elaborated as possible, and some of them look as though the maker had studied every point where he could get on another bit of lace, motif embroidery no matter how small, nevertheless, so artistically has it been done that there is no studied effect.

In nearly all cases the hat frame or a part of it such as the brim or the crushed top, is of the same color as the suit while the trimmings, feathers, flowers, etc., are of a contrasting and generally of a brighter color except in the case of the red and greens in which case the decoration should subdue and soften. On numbers of hats a golden yellow is used to brighten a somber tint, and is found in a velvet band inside and showing above the real hat band, or it may be the aigrette, or the flowers underneath or a big velvet chouchou in front or in some cases an immense gold buckle.

The separate waist is still popular and it would seem doubtful if it ever went out it is such a convenience. Those of plaits both in silk and soft wool goods are now fashionable for morning and knockabout waists and are of the deepest shade in the plaid. They are made extremely plain with three broad tucks on each side of the center-front. In the case of the heavy linen band down the front having buttons and buttonholes and a pocket over the left breast. A newer fad just arrived from Paris is, instead of the pocket, to embroider the owners monogram on the left sleeve. All waists for utility wear are appearing with long sleeves and the six is perceptibly decreasing. When it comes to the taffeta and fancier materials a little more decoration is seen. A few cross-wise tucks just below the shoulders, and tucks to match form the cuff, a yoke made of pieces, four in number, are tucked in such a manner that when put together they are diagonal to each other. A pretty black taffeta waist made in the plainest fashion was yet extremely stylish because of the ornamentation given by the three beautiful jet buttons down the front and two cuffs.

Shoes for the winter are broad in the soles but do not flare far beyond Gaiters are now to be found in all the prevailing colors both plain and in the plaids. And it is possible to take a piece of the material of your dress to one of the large shoe stores and with a heavy lining have gaiters to exactly match your costume. In house shoes the fashion is to have them match the costume or else they are in the finest grade of patten leather. Slippers are of the most elaborate workmanship and expensive in proportion.

I found a new style of belt the other day which was a piece of soft striped silk of generous width pulled through fancy slides of which there are three in addition to the buckle, the largest, of course, being in the back. These buckles slides are beautifully carved, enameled, sometimes set with stones, again they are plain but formed heavy coils of gold.

Ties and collars have nothing that is so very new to report as that those with long ends are usually embroidered in a contrasting color. A number of wide flat collars edged with tiny-knife-plaittings are seen on the early jacket. Vests make up for any plainness in a jacket for they are fully covered with braiding, embroidery or some other form of decoration.
