PROPOSES CRUSHED ROCK ROAD
County Court Will Figure On Finishing Turner Road

County Judge Scott is figuring on the expense of putting a coating of crushed rock on the convict-built road from Salem to the reform school. If he can get some assistance in the way of hauling from the property owners he favors putting about four inches of rock on that road, and rolling it down with a heavy road roller, and doing a thorough job. He says the property owners should do the hauling, as there is great difficulty in securing teams at this time of the year.
Judge Scott favors finishing the road and accepting Governor Chamberlain's proposition to extend the road south on the same terms. The property owners from the state reform school to Turner will have to raise the subscription to do part of the work, and Judge Scott expects to have a conference with the governor in time to submit a proposition at this session of the county court. The county commissioners' court meets again Thursday, when the matter will be taken up and licked into shape. Judge Scott says there is difficulty in placing crushed rock at present on account of the bridge over North Mill creek being taken up, and hence it would be a favorable time to put the crushed rock on the Turner road.
