MUMMY TALKS AND EATS

Running Mate of the Maid Weighs Three Hundred and Sixty-five Pounds

The first time the writer interviewed a mummy was at the world's fair in Chicago, in 1893. The gentleman who submitted to that operation was Ramases III, who resided in Egypt some time ago, and did a stunt at pyramid building. He had a grown daughter who fished young Moses out of the Nile. This fellow looked somewhat like a blending of a dead monkey and an evaporated prune and when interviewed, he spake never a word. The mummy of the "Maid and the Mummy" company is in the city today with the rest of the company, and will be seen at the opera house tonight. In private life, he is Fred Warren, and, in the parlance of the hour, he is a pippin. He weighs 365 pounds, one for every day in the year, and eats and talks like other people; only more and better than some.

Fred Warren is not a handsome man. Lovesick matinee girls never accuse him of bowing in the breeze like a wind-swayed vine. But on the stage, in his own particular part, he there with the goods.

Mr. Warren says that in many rural places they are sometimes forced to play in, the name of the comedy is often taken in dead earnest. In one Texas town, a dime museum aggregation, with a petrified man, was unloaded at the same time. The waiting natives were told that the mummy was in the box, and they accommodatingly got in and helped to carry the petrified man, which weighed several tons, a mile up town. Warren was all the time puffing along behind.

The mummy was easy to interview. It is said to be more difficult to get the maids to talk.

"CHECKERS" A GOOD SHOW.

Rattling Fine Attraction Held the Boards at Grand Opera House Last Night.

"Checkers" is a good show, but it is not a great play. The house that greeted it last night in this city and the enthusiasm the production aroused were evidences that Salem was pleased. "Checkers" has evoked fluttering comment clear across the continent, and has met with the approval of theatre-goers from Bangor, Me., to Seattle, except that it did not come up to the high standard required by the retail clerks and domestic help, who set the dramatic pace in Portland, according to the "heathen" writer in one of the evening newspapers there.

There is no horse play, but a good deal of horse racing in this production. It contains nothing coarse or immoral; while at the same time it is not a problem play, and teaches no lesson. It will never be absorbed in the same trust with the Women's Christian Temperance Union or the Salvation Army.

Taking it for granted that people patronize the stage to be amused, "Checkers" fills the bill. It is just what the doctor ordered. Hans Robert plays the title role, and does it well. Mr. Robert is a young man, and gives promise to become a great actor. In the main he was well supported, and the special scenery and stage settings were admirable and added considerably to the completeness of the production.

ARTISANS' OPEN MEETING.

Officers of the Supreme Lodge Will Make Addresses Tonight.

Tonight is the open meeting given by the Artisans. Supreme Master Artisan Hudson, and Supreme Medical Director Manion will be the principal speakers of the evening, and, besides these, a splendid program has been arranged for the entertainment of those who will be present.

MRS. LOW SWALLOWS POISON.

Wife of City Councilman Took Carbolic Acid by Accident.

Mrs. Walter Low, wife of Alderman Low, swallowed a quantity of carbolic acid Wednesday night, and, for a while was in danger of death. She was attended by a physician, and, after her removal to the Willamette hospital, the antidotes administered had effect, and yesterday she was able to be removed to her home. She is now out of danger. It is given out that Mrs. Low took the deadly poison through mistake, believing that she was taking bryotol, which she was using as a gargle.

LEADS WORLD IN HOPS

Oregon Produces Over Thirteen Per Cent of World's Hop Crop

The bureau of labor and statistics has just completed an estimate of the hop crop in Oregon, and has computed some interesting comparative statistics of the hop industry for the whole world. These figures place Oregon in a most favorable light, and show that this state grows more than 13 per cent of the entire hop crop.

A recapitulation of the bureau's table follows: In 1901 Oregon produced 11,801,250 pounds of hops; in 1902, 17,250,000 pounds; in 1903, 17,650,250 pounds; in 1904, 17,650,000 pounds; in 1905, 20,525,185 pounds, while the estimate for 1906 is 21,365,500 pounds, or 123,300 bales.

The oldest yard in Oregon is at Buena Vista. It was set out in 1868. There are 20,750 acres in hops in Oregon, and if the estimate of 21,365,500 pounds holds out the average production per acre will be 1121 pounds of cured hops.

To show the relation that the Oregon crop bears to that of the world, the figures of 1905 are given: New York, 8,200,000 pounds; California, 12,750,000 pounds; Washington, 9,800,000 pounds; Oregon, 20,525,185 pounds; of the Dominion of Canada produces 1,010,250 pounds. This is practically the entire product of North America. The total yield of the world in 1905 was 259,554,332 pounds. Of this amount Oregon 13.13 per cent of the product.

Five yards of baling cloth is the maximum quantity to be used in making the bale, and the standard weight of each yard of baling cloth is fixed by law at 24 ounces in Oregon.

The amount spent in the hop business reaches a vast number of people, goes into many different channels, and benefits perhaps directly more people that need the money than any other industry. The government estimate of hops consumed in Oregon in 1900, the latest data at hand, was 96,699 pounds.

The estimate amount paid to about 34,000 pickers this year was $1,075,550. Other expenses in taking care of the crop of 1906 amounts to about $198,805.55, a total of $1,274,355.55 paid out for harvesting the hops each year. The price paid for picking hops was one cent per pound for picking green hops. A box of hops in Oregon is nine bushels, or 50 pounds. A bale of hops in Oregon is about 17 boxes.
