A Collection of Important Paragraphs for Your Consideration

Grand Masquerade— And skating carnival at the Auditorium rink Friday evening, February 22d. Admission 25c.

Mrs. Walter Reed Coming. Among the treats on the program which will be given in the Genser concert Monday evening will be several vocal numbers from Mrs. Walter Reed, of Portland. Mrs. Reed has a rich contralto voice, of which she has perfect control and whether in fortissimo or delicate passages her rendition causes one to forget for the time the singer for the beautiful shadings and sentiment of the composer.

Heid Farmer's Institute— A very successful and well-attended farmers' institute was held at Brooks yesterday under the direction and auspices of the State Agricultural College, E. W. Manning, Dr. James Withycombe, Howard

MANY A MAN Is a critic because he likes to be contrary. You can go contrary to the wishes of your own friends and neighbors and some times get the best of them; but go contrary to the dictates of nature and you will always get the worst of it.

If Nature Says Spectacles Why, Spectacles it must be. Nature won't accept just spectacles though; they must be right spectacles. We can give the kind nature demands, and our prices are right, too.

Grand Officers Visit Lodges— The local lodges of Odd Fellows were last evening honored by an official visit from Grand Master E. V. Carter, High Priest Sawter and Grand Secretary E. E. Sharon, who spoke on the great benefits of Odd Fellowship, and complimented Chemeketa lodge on their work and loyalty. There were about 200 of the local lodge and visiting members present, and apropos to the affair a fine banquet was served.

Small Fire— An alarm was sent in at 9 o'clock last night to the fire department from the Salem lodging house, owing to a small blaze, which was extinguished before the company reached the building. The landlord, while looking for a mouse, lighted fire to the fringe of a lounge, and which was quickly enveloped

In flames. The lounge was quickly carried to the street, and was the only article of furniture to be materially damaged.

Remnant— Wall paper, 5c a roll. Buren & Hamilton.

Short of Fuel— The setting out of an oil car yesterday, while en route to this city from Portland, caused the local plant to run short of fuel last evening, and as a result the service was slightly crippled. The information of the delayed car did not reach the local manager until it was too late to permit of other arrangements, and the condition was unavoidable. The car arrived early this morning, and the tanks were soon filled.

Masquerade Prices— Grandeur than ever, on exhibition in Patton Bros.' east window.

High School Tennis Court— The Salem high school is going to have an excellent addition to their athletic department, in the form of a tennis court, which is now under construction on the southwest corner of the school campus. It is going to be just an ordinary dirt court, but will be constructed in a way that will make it an equal, if not superior to any court now in the city. Most of the work is to be done by the students. A tennis club is being organized in the high school, and only such students as join this and give their share in work or money will be allowed the use of the court. A meeting was held the other night, in which Ralph Moores was chosen as president for this year. A more complete organization will be made in a day or so.

Salem Military Band— Will furnish music for the masquerade at the Auditorium rink Friday evening, February 22d. Admission 25c.

Bond Approved— George M. Smith yesterday filed his bond in the Marion county court as administrator of the estate of the late John King, and the same was approved by Judge Scott. The bond is in the sum of $20,000.

Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Reed, of Portland, are visiting Rev. and Mrs. D. A. Errett, of this city. Mr. and Mrs. Reed and Rev. and Mrs. Errett were old-time friends in Palmyra, Missouri.

Worthy Grand Matron May L. Sherwin, of the Eastern Star, who has been in the city visiting the local lodge, left this morning for Portland, where she will officially meet the orders of that city.

A Crossing Nuisance

Some of the good people who live up near Thirteenth and Court streets have a grievance against the city in comparison with which the Southern Pacific violations sink into insignificance. Up there they have a crossing that is about a foot higher than the sidewalk, and they have tried for two years to get it lowered. Neighbors by the score have interceded with Mayor Waters, and his eleven different street commissioners, with the city marshal, the dog catcher and the late famous police force, but the old crossing is still the highest card in the deck. Now they are religiously going after Jim Martin, the street commissioner who lives within a block, and they propose to make life so miserable for him that he will beg for the privilege of cutting it down. There are more children to the square rod in that section than anywhere else in town, and there is hardly an hour of the day when some mother is not obliged to rescue her precious offspring from destruction by this pitfall. It is now suggested that it will be easier to get the sidewalks raised than the crossings lowered, and that process may be invoked, but at all events the neighborhood propose to have the nuisance abated cost what it will.

Advance Sale

Tickets for the skating masquerade, to be given at the Auditorium rink Friday evening, February 22d, are now on sale at the box office. Admission 25c, skates 25c.

With tears in her voice, Evelyn replied: "Oh, I could not. White wouldn't let me. He made me swear I would never tell mamma."

Jerome drew from the girl a detailed statement of various occasions when improper relations with White were renewed. Time and again tears came into her eyes, her voice trembling as she answered. She insisted that she always fought White's advances, and that he always piled her with wine until she was partially intoxicated. She said she had been White's victim more than once in the Twenty-fourth street studio and more than once in the Madison Square tower. She remembered only once in the Twenty-second street studio. She explained that "White got scared about the Twenty-second street place."

Evelyn said she told all of the pitiful story to Thaw in Paris, and that he called White names.

Again Jerome kindly asked: "Why didn't you tell your mother?"

"Oh, I couldn't; I'd rather die than tell her." A pitiful wail seemed to make Jerome yield for a time.

"Did you ever visit Dr. Carlton Flint?"

"Couldn't remember such a visit."

"Did you ever visit the doctor with Jack Barrymore?"

"No."

"Sure?"

"Yes."

"In the operations you have undergone, were any of them of a criminal nature?"

Evelyn explained the operations for appendicitis, and Jerome dropped the subject. The room buzzed with gossip as the question recalled rumors in connections with the names of Evelyn and Barrymore. Evelyn showed a determination to get the ordeal over with, for Jerome offered to excuse her at noon, but the girl said she preferred to go on.

The Thaw examination took a new turn. The witness gained strength, and sipped from a glass of water. Jerome read a letter written by Evelyn to an actress in the Florodora Company, then playing in London, describing the pleasures of Paris, and her visit to the "Dead Rat."

She admitted that the account in the bank in the Metropolitan opera house block was separate from the Mercantile Trust Company account, and that it was provided by White immediately after he wronged her. Following the statement that her improper relations with White were discontinued after January, 1902, Jerome questioned Evelyn about the letters received from White in Paris.

She said the last she saw of them was in Hartridge's office. Jerome called Hartridge to the stand and tried to force him to produce the letters. The attorney stood on his professional privileges, and easily balked the prosecutors. Jerome asked Hartridge if he had a report of Dr. Hammond, the alienist on Thaw's mental condition. It is reported that Hammond reported Thaw still insane. Jerome would like to get the report to aid him to send Thaw to the asylum, if he fails to convict. Before Hartridge could answer Jerome withdrew the question and a recess was taken.

Court will be held tomorrow and Saturday. The judge upset the agreement made this morning to accommodate the Pittsburg doctors, who are here to testify. Evelyn was recalled when court reconvened this afternoon. Jerome said he would require a day and a half on cross-examination.

Legal process has been served commanding Hartridge to produce Evelyn's letter.

This afternoon Jerome said that two witnesses were present who came from other states; that Evelyn was tired, and asked that the trial be suspended in order that the testimony of Drs. Deemer and Bingham could be taken at once. Hartridge objected. He said that Evelyn was under great strain, and wished to get through with the ordeal. Dr. Bingham was then permitted to tell why he must return to Pittsburg. The court announced that he would hold court Friday and Saturday for the benefit of the Pittsburg gentlemen. Evelyn was recalled to the stand. Jerome reverted to the wrong at White's hands. Evelyn said this recital on the stand was the first time she ever told her wrongs, except to Thaw in Paris.

Says White Was Kind. Jerome recalled the incident of the unnamed man in the tower studio. The witness repeated, under questioning, that Edna Goodrich introduced her to White in 1901, in July or August. Jerome recalled her softening toward White on her trip from Paris to Boulogne, and she said: "I knew of no one upon whom I could depend more as a friend than White. He was kind and showed consideration, especially for my family. He was a good Irishman. I told him White was a grand man, except for his terrible falling. He was all the more dangerous. White was always kind and thoughtful, more so than most men. He never made love to me until that night, and even then like a father seemed to admire me, and be interested in me. I never could make Thaw understand that."

"Did Edna Goodrich tell you anything about White before you met him?" asked Jerome.

"Edna said he was a grand man. I asked if he was engaged to you. She said no. She said he wanted to meet me, and got me into New York society."

"Did she tell you he was married?"

"No. Some one at the theatre told me later."

"Was that before he drugged you? You knew at the time of the drugging that he was married?"

"Yes."

Evelyn told of another girl to whom White paid attentions, which aroused her suspicions. White, she said, manifested a paternal manner toward this girl. She told of a party where White and the girl were present. White insisted that the girl could only have one glass of champagne. This made her suspect his intentions toward the girl.

"It was the same bluff he put up to me," said the witness bitterly.

"The same bluff?" asked Jerome.

"Yes, it was nothing but a bluff," said Evelyn.

Coaxed, Teased and Scolded. Jerome tried to draw from Evelyn statements which would show that she was not, the innocent girl she appeared to be from her story of when she met White. He could not make her admit being familiar with the gossip of the dressing rooms. One by one Jerome led her over the "parties" at White's studios previous to her ruination. She said that at none of them had she seen anything improper. Jerome tried to make her admit, in a clear attempt, that the champagne she drank the night of her ruination was not different from any other champagne. He reverted to the attention of White after her ruin. Answering his question witness said that White was not decorous in his treatment.

"He was always coaxing, sometimes teasing and sometimes scolding unpleasantly to renew their illicit relations." She said she never tried to go anywhere alone with White, on account of his obstructive pleadings.

Evelyn Makes a Break. The most sensational feature occurred late this afternoon. By a slip of the tongue by Evelyn, it was which she named Frances Belmont, a former member of the original Florodora Sextette, now Lady Adburton, as a frequent visitor to White's studios. With this exception all the other names mentioned where whispered by the witness to Jerome's ear. The audible mention of Miss Belmont's name was an accident.

Jerome drew from Evelyn the admission that she occupied at the Grand Hotel with her maid a room connecting with the one Thaw occupied. The trial was then adjourned until Monday.
