New York, April 19 .- Evelyn Thaw is tired of the stage, the city. and endless dressing. She wants to go out West and live on a ranch with Harry. She says nothing on earth can persuade her to return to the stage. "Dan O'Reilly told me," she said, "that a theatrical manager almost wept on his neck, lamenting to think that all this nortoriety was going to waste." Evelyn resented the criticism of a writer who found fault with her because she did not ery enough on the stand. She said: I did not want to cry. I bit my fiesh and clinched my hands until they cut to hold back the tears." She confessed that she laughed a little when Jerome introduced her dlary, because it recalled funny things she had forgotten.

This obstruction seems to have been in the way of Mr. Sherwood, who did not wish to spend his time opening gates, and he says that he told Mr. Skipton that the gate should be removed.

According to Mr. Sherwood's statement he went to Mr. Skipton last Saturday and told him that the gate was a nuisance, and as he (Sherwood) owned property on that block he would remove the obstruction. "Last Sunday," says Mr. Sherwood, 'I obtained a permit from the street commissioner to remove the gate. I therefore, on Monday morning, proceeded to tear the gate out, and I threw it down the embankment near the slough with a pile of othsenatorial deadlock was continued or rubbish." I then called up Skipton over the phone and told him that egialature adjourned until Tuesday. I had taken the gate down, and that he had better look out for his cow.'
