X-RAYS

Woodburn claims to have more bustle than any city in the valley. This may be, but well of a Sunday afternoon, when the band plays, Salem is there with the goods to some extent.

Ruef's lawyers tried to keep him from confessing, and when he finally determined to tell the truth they quit him. Queer people those lawyers.

Calhoun, president of the San Francisco railroads, is yelling "stop thief!" through a megaphone—and his hat.

Secretary Root says: "Present scandals do not indicate the country is growing worse." The secretary fails to suggest what they do indicate, but certainly not, that as a nation, we are getting religious.

There is a Weber-Bustle Canning Company in Tacoma—must be an extra crop of them around that burg.

The numberless signers to referendum petitions are not feeling particularly friendly toward Mr. U'Ren just now. The impression has gained some ground that the last amendment to the law was in the shape of a "nigger in the woodpile."

Skidoo was the name of a little postoffice in Pennsylvania, and it was true to name, for the people getting their mail there kicked, and the department changed its name to Cherry Brook. Skidoo skiddooed.

Strength All in Her Wishbone.

She is a very young girl, but she expressed the difference between possessing the aspirations we all have for doing something and the perseverance to succeed in it. "Oh," sighed her best girl friend, coming into her room one day and commenting upon some of her successes. "I always wonder how it is that you succeed in doing things so well. It seems to me that every time you try to do a thing you manage to do it. Now, it's different with me. I wish to do a great many things, but somehow I never do them. I wonder why it is?" "Why," laughingly exclaimed the aforesaid wise young lady, who had probably studied the weaknesses of her visiting friend, "I'll tell you why it is, my dear. It's because you've got a very strong wishbone and such a very weak backbone."—Philadelphia Record.

Tree Frog in Brazil.

The man who did a-wooling go after frogs has found a new frog. This frog is an inhabitant of the dense Amazonian forest region, and is well known to the Indians, who say that they often hear its loud voice calling to its mate in the moonlight. But although E. A. Goeldi, director of the Paris museum, Brazil, and others have spent many years in the vicinity of its haunts, only quite recently this frog was discovered to be a stranger to the frog science. Its breeding habits are most extraordinary. The breeding ground is chosen in the high trees, where depressions or holes occur in the branches. These depressions are lined with a resinous substance which is collected by the frogs as it drops from the bark of certain trees. They are made water-tight, and soon get filled with the rain. In this water the frog lays its eggs, and there the young remain during the entire tadpole period. The new frog is yellowish green, with particles of brown on the body and bands of the same color across the limbs. It is one of the most known tree frogs.
