"SCRAP OF PAPER" TONIGHT.
The play of Oratory Will Give Annual Play This Evening.

The students of the College of Oratory, under the direction of Dean Brown-Savage have been faithfully rehearsing for the past several months on the comedy "A Scrap of Paper," which will be presented in the Grand Opera House tonight. The production contains plot enough to attract sympathetic interest, yet it is a comedy with laughable comedy that does not forget business cares and the more serious side of life, and the performers are well suited to various roles, which are handled with ability that ranks near professionalism. These performances have been one of the most pleasant of the school year in the past. Judging from the cast and the plot of the piece, "A Scrap of Paper" will probably be the most brilliant of any of the gems produced by the students. The play will be enlivened by many of some of Salem's best talent, and which will be several numbers by Mr. Robert Eakin and Miss Winslow.

The cast is as follows:

Prosper Couramont.....
Wallace G. Trill
Baron de la Glaciere.....
Clark Belknap
Brisemouche, landed proprietor and naturalist.....
Ralph Rader
Anatole, his ward...
Chester Catlow
Baptiste, servant.....
Francois, servant to Prosper.....
Kling McDonald

Olive Rigby
Suzanne de Ruseville, her cousin.

Mathilde, sister to Louise.....
Olive Riddell

Ione Fisher
Pauline, maid...

An Impecunious Playwright.

In 1879 James Davis began racing. At one time he had twenty horses in training, but within six months he had lost every shilling and had allowed his business to go to rack and ruin.

He started again in new offices, and for a while attracted a number of new clients; but he found it impossible to earn enough money to meet his considerable requirements and took his name off the rolls.

He then turned his attention to the bar, ate his dinners, but was never called, journalism proving a greater attraction. He became the theatrical critic of the Sporting Times, and he was a regular contributor to several other weekly papers.

He related himself that one of his proprietors, fearing that his articles would get the paper into trouble, found him the money to start a paper of his own, and the Bat came into existence. Its staff was a remarkable one, and its career checkered. In later years Davis established a weekly called the Phoenix.

After the death of the Bat Davis went to Paris, where he was assistant editor of Gollignani's Messenger, and where he spent what he has described as "the only really hard-up time I ever had in my life."

He came back to England in 1890, had a period of some prosperity, and was "broke again in 1898;" for, he said, "I made it a rule to allow my

SALEM WILL SHOW APPRECIATION

"The Queen of Flowers" to Greet the Queen of the Stage

Scarcely an event of the season will begin to attract such attention among theatre-goers as the appearance of the famous star Mrs. Leslie-Carter at the Grand Opera House Wednesday in her most successful play "Du Barry" by David Belasco. Mrs. Leslie-Carter is today easily first among the English speaking artists and in emotional roles.

without a peer. "Du Barry," her most successful play, tells a most fascinating story of the days of Louis XV of France and as a production it has never, in scenic investment, been equalled.

Briefly this is the story of "Du Barry." In the first act Du Barry is revealed as Jeanette Vaubernier, a charming little milliner in a fashweekly expenditure to just exceed my weekly income."

Two or three years later Davis accidentally met George Edwardes in a train a day or two after the production of a new play at the Gaiety. Edwardes asked him what he thought of it, and "Owen Hall" expressed his belief that he could write one much better. "All right," replied Edwardes, "you shall do the next."

Within a very short time Mr. Edwardes received the manuscript of "The Gaiety Girl," practically the first of the modern musical comedies.

Then Mr. Davis in collaboration with Sidney Jones, wrote a series of successful musical comedies at Daly's—"An Artist's Model," "The Gaiety," "A Greek Slave." The Daily lonable Paris shop at the time of Louis XV. A young officer of the King's guard, Crosse-Brissac, has fallen in love with her and would make her his wife. At the very hour when she has made an appointment to meet Crosse-Brissac she is lured to the famous gambling establishment of the Marquis de Quesnory, through the blandishments of Jean du Barry, who is in league with the notorious Marquis. Her beauty attracts the King and he schemes to make her his mistress, but through a series of trying experiences which are intensely thrilling Jeanette remains true to her soldier lover and before a great assemblage she makes the King the common laughing stock. In the end, however, she is shorn of her power by the Revolutionists and condemned to death because of her association with the Royalists.

It is conceded that Mrs. Leslie-Carter has never been seen to better advantage than as Madame du Barry and the play is one of the most notable of the past decade. Her supporting company is one of exceptional merit.

Owing to the length of the play the curtain will rise promptly at 8 o'clock.

company during that time included Heyden Coffin, Miss Marie Tempest, Miss Letty Lind, Rutland Barrington and many other well known artists, and the "Ogen Hall plays were immense successes."

Turning once more to "Owen Hall's" confessions, one learns that he received £2000 for the libretto, "A Greek Slave," and that he lost it all horse racing in three weeks.

For the Lyric he wrote with Leslie Stuart an enormously successful "Florodora," which afterwards had so great a vogue in America that it was said that the famous sextet, "Tell me, Gentle Maiden, Are There Any More at Home Like You?" had supplanted "Yankee Doodle" as the American national air.

Afterward there came "The Silver Slipper," "The Girl From Kay's" (another huge success), "The Medal and the Maid," "Sergeant Brno," and "The Little Cherub," the last still running successfully in the United States.

Last autumn, with characteristic audacity, Mr. Davis floated "Owen Hall, Limited," a company which was to produce his plays without the expense of the middleman manager. For many weeks he had been seriously ill, but his new "book" tentatively called "The Catherine Wheel" was almost finished, and it was announced yesterday that it was to be produced in the autumn at the Adelphi Theater.—London Leader.

Look for Quality First

It's Practical Economy to Buy Reliable Merchandise

Even if it does cost a little more at first. Don't buy goods of questionable quality at any price. Look at the B. K. & W. label which stands for all that's good in men's clothing. THE OUTWARD APPEARANCE of a suit is often deceiving. Nicely shaped shoulders, sleeves, lapels, etc., do not constitute all the requisites of good clothes.

The hidden parts which you must take on faith are most exactly looked after in the B. K. & W. suits, and these possess correct style, individuality, and honest, lasting qualities. Our cash plan of business enables us to undersell "regular stores."
