X-RAYS

Orchard in his testimony Tuesday confessed to stealing a sheep. This is strongly corroborative of his wife's statement that he is a Pinkerton detective.

Schmitz getting money from the Poodle Dog and Pup restaurants was all right. He was only sampling a little "hot dog."

Secretary of State Benson is having plenty of trouble over the referendum laws. Those against the U. of O. appropriation have sued out a mandamus to compel him to file their petitions, and Sheriff Stevens, of Multnomah county, sues out an injunction to prevent him putting the petitions concerning the feeding of prisoners on the ballots.

The Jimtown fair is said to be an utter failure. Now, with many ryllions spent, when will the prosecutions for graft begin?

Joseph Thiel, according to report, has blocked the sale of the Coleman tract, by raising the price on his tract from $75 an acre to $130. It is said the state will commence condemnation proceedings for this tract, but as this is something the state cannot do, it looks very much, in the light of an X-ray, as though the board intended to, and has perhaps already agreed to pay the price.

The picture of the June class of Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite Masons in the Telegram lacks the principal feature of all Portland's pictures—Tom Richardson doesn't seem up in it; a bay window on a barn house.

Secretary Rosenburg, of the United Fishermen of the Pacific Coast, says that practically all the salmon that reach the wheels of the middle Columbia, are caught, and none are left to spawn. He then admits that the amount of fish taken by the wheels is only 5 per cent of the total catch. As Astoria, according to this, gets 95 per cent of the total run. She should refrain from kicking.

Maybe that Schmitz trial will end today, but Orchard, like Tennyson's book, promises to go on forever.

Now if some good citizen would wash alkali for the mixture, Com-

ANOTHER FACTORY FOR SALEM

Hickory Bark Remedy Company to Establish Plant Here

Salem will soon have another factory, and, judging from what similar concerns accomplish at other points, it will soon grow into a pretentious institution, and one that will add another big payroll to our city. Reference is made to the fact that the committee of the Salem Board of Trade yesterday closed the stock subscription for the Hickory Bark Remedy Co., of Walla Walla. The proposition came from this company that if Salem would take 111 shares of its preferred stock they would move their plant here, and transact all its business from this point. A committee of the Board of Trade was appointed to take the matter up, and the work was closed yesterday. The stock subscribers, who include about 20 of Salem's most enterprising business citizens, met last evening and closed a contract with Mr. Haar, the president of the company. A trustee was appointed by the local stockholders to hold the money in trust and carry out the terms of the contract with the parties. A pool was also entered into by the Salem parties holding their stock in a lump, as it were, for mutual protection.

The company will begin moving as soon as a location is settled upon, and inside of 30 days will be in active operation in our city.

This concern will operate upon the methods employed by the large leading concerns of the kind all over the land; and the fact that they are all big money makers, makes the Salemites interested feel that they have a good thing. The Salem Board of Trade is also to be congratulated upon its success in securing this establishment. Now let it cast about for the next good thing to bring here, and take as active steps in securing it. These are the things that build up a town and should be encouraged in a business-like manner.

Closing Musical Recitals.

The Normal College of Music held its commencement in the First Christian church Tuesday and Wednesday evening. The pupils' recital was held Tuesday evening and was witnessed by a large and appreciative audience. The seventeen numbers on the program were well rendered, and reflect great credit upon Dr. Z. M. Parvin, Mrs. Denton and Miss Elva Winslow, as teachers, as well as the pupils.

The graduation and recital of the more advanced pupils was held last night, and was one of the best amateur musical performances ever held in Salem. Miss Jennie Williams, of this city, was graduated from the vocal department. She has a clear soprano voice which has an unusual range, and is marked by its richness and pureness of tone.

One Body Found.

Norfolk, Va., June 13.—According to report the body one of the eleven officers of the battleship Minnesota was found today floating in Hampton Roads. It is believed to be that of the coxswain of the launch.

mercial street would be paved with soft soap.

Wonderful how far a little oil will go. Since that carload was put on the streets here, Wasco county claims to have fine oil croppings, and the grease is showing in some of Portland's suburban town lots.

Inventor of the Steamboat.
 In 1797, at the age of 32, Fulton went to Paris, and there, that year, in the company of Joseph Barlow, the immortal author of "Hasty Pudding," experimented on the Seine with a submarine explosive to which he gave the name of torpedo. Then he built a submarine boat, in which Napoleon took a passing interest, and which on July 3, 1801, at Brest, had a fairly successful trial. But much to his disappointment, neither France nor England would buy his invention, which now, after a century, is justified by the importance which the submarine boat has assumed in naval operations.

But meantime Fulton had made the acquaintance of Robert R. Livingston, the American Minister to France, who in 1798 had successfully tried to operate a steamboat at New York. Learning of Fulton's cleverness as an inventor, the diplomat proposed a partnership, with the ultimate purpose of securing the exclusive right to run steamers in New York waters. A boat built by Fulton and tried at Paris in 1803 was sufficiently promising as a model, to warrant a more ambitious undertaking, and in 1806 Fulton returned to America to begin work on the Clermont, which took her name from Livingston's country seat on the Hudson. The boat was 140 feet long and sixteen and a half feet broad. It is a curious fact—a commentary on French claims of priority in steam navigation—that in France the first steamboats were called Fulton boats.

Clermont and the excitement her appearance on the Hudson created is familiar to every schoolboy; but what seems to have escaped general attention is the circumstance that the terror inspired among superstitious sailors at night by the approach of the strange craft spouting fiery cinders (they used wood in the boilers then) later turned to fury at the thought that here was a dangerous competitor. Indeed, up to the time of his death Fulton was involved in incessant litigation by carriers who attacked his vessels by alleging flaws in patents and in legislative grants. Fulton not only built the first steam packet, but he also built the first steam ferry-boat (the double-ender, steered at either end) and the first steam war vessel, the Demologos, which was launched in 1814. He constructed the first of the steamers to ply between New York and the ports on Long Island sound, and he also designed the steamer that led the way to the commercial development of the great cities of the Middle West which lie along the Mississippi.

This remarkable inventor, this no less remarkable patriot, died on February 24, 1815, and now, just a century after the production of his greatest work, the citizens of New York, who owe as much to him as to any other man, are about to erect a monument to his memory and a suitable tomb to take the place of the grave which all these years has been one of the least conspicuous features of Trinity churchyard.—New England Magazine.

Sickness Spoiled Trip.
 Miss Ethel Crowder, a member of the Telegram party, has returned to her home in this city from her Eastern trip, which was marred, so far as she was concerned by illness. In fact she had an experience that was rare. On the way east the high altitude affected her heart, and she became critically ill. Three physicians and a nurse labored with her. Her heart ceased beating, and she was given up for dead, and her arms crossed, amidst the tears of her girl friends. Then her eyes opened, and she regained consciousness and gradually improved. One physician remained at her side until Chicago was reached. She was never well enough to enjoy the excursion, and had to be cared for on the way home. But the party saw many things and were splendidly treated.—Albany Democrat.
