Operators May Conclude to Carry Strike Into Offices of Chicago Board of Trade and Also Into the New York Chamber of Commerce

San Francisco, June 27.—The telegraphers' strike situation is unchanged. The companies claim the work of moving messages continues to improve. Small is expected to make an important announcement, but there is no intimation as to its nature.

Chicago, June 27.—Secretary Russell, of the telegraphers, said today it was possible that the strike would reach the Chicago board of trade and the New York stock exchange within 24 hours. He says sentiment among the operators favors a blow at the board of exchanges. The Federation of Labor has called the attention of the attorney-general to alleged violations of the interstate commerce law by the companies.

FORCED THROUGH WINDOW.

Body of Man Crashes Into Trolley Car on Bridge.

New York, June 27.—Passengers on a trolley car crossing Brooklyn bridge last night were horrified when the rear window suddenly crashed in, admitting the form of a man, who landed senseless and bleeding in the aisle.

The man was dead when an ambulance surgeon arrived. The neck was broken and a fractured rib had pierced a lung. Papers found on the body indicated that the victim was John Nelson, an electrical engineer of Brooklyn.

How he came to be thrown through the window may never be known, as the police, after a thorough investigation, failed to determine how such an accident was possible. The force behind the body carried it through the vestibule and well into the car proper.

Races Postponed.

New London, Conn., June 27.—Rough weather forced the postponement of the 'varsity four and the freshman eight Yale-Harvard races, scheduled this morning, until after the big 'varsity eight at 1:30 this afternoon.

New London, Conn., June 27.—The 'varsity big race is postponed until 6:30.

JUDGE LANDIS' ANSWER

ROCKY WILL TESTIFY

Landis Says He Will Levy Fine On Each of the 1492 Counts—Five New Indictments With 4,000 Counts Are Still Pending.

Chicago, June 27.—Federal Judge Landis this morning issued subpoenas directing Rockefeller, Rogers, Wm. Rockefeller, G. W. Stahl, J. A. Moffatt, W. H. Cowan, Archibald, W. H. Tibford, C. N. Pratt, Chas. T. White, H. E. Felton and Fred A. Wann to appear before him July 6th, to answer questions concerning the finances of the oil trust. The trust has been found guilty of giving rebates to the Alton road, and Landis can fine the company a maximum of $29,000. The trust attorneys defied Judge Landis yesterday, when he asked for information, hence the subpoenas to get information at first hand.

The unexpected action of the court yesterday afternoon, which caused a sensation in the legal fight of the government against the oil company, followed another crushing defeat for the trust, with prospects of more serious trouble ahead. Judge Landis, of the United States district court, denied a new trial to the oil trust, and overruled 14 motions made by its chief counsel, John S. Miller. In quick succession every technical point raised by Miller in the big case was decided against the corporation in blows that staggered the defense. Every effort to minimize the $29,260,000 fine, which Judge Landis has the power to impose to a fine of $20,000 failed and was turned into victory for the government.

Judge Landis not only ruled against the oil trust on every point, but subjected officials and employees of the Chicago & Alton railroad to a severe grilling on the witness stand to learn the secret of the special rate given to the corporation for oil shipments. Mr. Miller objected to the court hearing, declaring that it was improper and had no relation to the trial, but again he was overruled by the court.

When Judge Landis learned that the 6-cent rate given to the Standard Oil Company for shipments from Chapelle to East St. Louis had not been made known to the railroad freight agents generally, while a 10-cent rate was in force, the court ordered that a subpoena be issued for F. L. Wann, former general freight agent of the road, who is now in California.

"Have him here by July 5th," Judge Landis directed. Admission was made by F. S. Hollands, chief rate clerk of the railroad that railroads frequently quoted special rates to shippers, and this opened a new line of investigation, to which Mr. Miller objected. The attorney declared that "it was not a grand jury investigation," and showed his displeasure at the broad scope of the inquiry.

After the motion for a new trial and a motion for the arrest of judgment had been denied, Mr. Miller sought to limit the impending fine to a maximum of $20,000 by a technical escape from the 1492 counts. Judge Landis indicated that he must impose the fine on each of the 1492 counts.

Chicago, June 27.—It develops that there are in existence five new indictments which have not figured in the conviction of the oil trust, and these contain 4000 counts.

Chicago, June 27.—Subpoenas were issued this morning for Rockefeller, Rogers and others.

RRRAIN STORM DEFENSE

Houston, Va., June 27.—The defense of Judge Loving in the murder trial scored a victory this morning, when the court ruled that Miss Loving's story of how Theodore Estes ruined her, causing her father to kill Estes, should be admitted in evidence. E. L. Kidd, in whose home the girl spent the night prior to the killing, testified that he regarded Loving as sane. Several witnesses testified along the line of Loving being hot tempered. The prosecution closes its case this afternoon.

Schmitz Sentence Postponed.

San Francisco, June 27.—The sentencing of Schmitz was this morning postponed for a week, over the protest of his attorneys.

Langdon stated the continuance was needed because he had not arrived at a decision regarding the four remaining extortion indictments against Schmitz. It is believed, however, the real reason for asking for a continuance is the failure of the part of the prosecution to agree upon a man to take the mayor's chair. So soon as this is done Schmitz will be sentenced, and formally removed from office. Schmitz professed to be indignant over the delay, saying the prosecution is obviously planning to keep him in jail to prevent him conveniently performing the duties of his office and filing a motion for appeal.

Francis Murphy Dying.

Laid the Blame On Miners' Federation—Witnesses Testify to Orchard's Threatening to Kill Steu-berg For Making Him a Pauper.

Boise, June 27.—Although substantial progress is being made, it is not likely the defense in the Haywood murder trial will be able to complete its side of the case before the middle of July, owing to the length of time consumed by Borah and Hawley in cross-examining every witness. The intensely hot weather is having its effect on the jurors, three of them showing the strain when they came into court today. The prosecution is still holding Dr. McGee and Mrs. Lottie Day here, in order that their testimony may be examined. If McGee's story that Orchard was in Wallace in July, 1904, is true, it absolutely upsets Orchard's claim that he was in Denver at that time holding a conference with Haywood and Moyer on the best means of getting rid of Bradley in San Francisco. Half a dozen detectives are now working the Coeur d'Alene, looking up evidence to discredit McGee. The latter is decidedly positive in his assertions, as he knew Orchard well.

The cross-examination of W. F. Davis continued, Borah referring back to the alleged conversation in Union hall at Altman, when Davis stated that Orchard, in his and East-erly's presence, declared Steu-berg had made him a pauper, and he would get square. Davis was sure that Orchard's exact statement, but still was unable to tell, excepting in general terms, what the others said at the time. Davis and Borah mixed in several wordy clashes, but the witness was not particularly worried by the aggressive manner of his inquisitor. Davis knew Orchard and his Cripple Creek wife, but swore he never visited their home. At the time of the Vindicator explosion he lived half a mile from the mine. Soon after the explosion he was placed in jail, and his family died soon afterwards. He did not recall seeing Orchard after the Vindicator explosion, but said he might have done so, as he was not intimate with Orchard, and he could not say. He absolutely denied that there was any serious trouble in the Cripple Creek district from the time the strike was ordered until the soldiers came in.

W. W. Rush, of Denver, a locomotive engineer, was formerly employed by the Florence & Cripple Creek railroad. He had charge of the engine which figured in the spike-pulling cases for which Davis and other union men were arrested, and later acquitted. Detective Scott told him an attempt would be made to wreck the train between the Economic mill and Victoria, and to be very careful. He swore Scott asked him if there was any real good place to wreck the train. He told him of a good place. Scott and Sterling rode with him, and he dropped them off at the point mentioned. Rush absolutely charged Scott and Sterling with taking a rail out of the track in order to wreck the train and throw the blame on the strikers.

Ed. Boyce again took the stand, and went fully into the history of the federation. He and his wife had an interest in the rich Hercules mine, a sixteenth of which Orchard once owned. He began as a miner in March, 1888, in the Coeur d'Alene, where he worked two years

He was discriminated against because he belonged to the union. He was arrested and held in the Boise jail for six months in 1893. Fourteen members of the union, he said, were sent to jail for violating the injunction of the federal court restraining them from trespassing on mining property. Hawley carried the matter to the supreme court, and got them all out. He said the Western Federation had its inception in the Boise jail, and that Hawley advised them to federate, as the mine owners had organized in Helena in 1890. He was still on the stand when recess was taken.
