BUNCOED ON FIREWORKS.

Fourth of July Committees Met Last Evening and Closed Celebration Business.

The various Fourth of July committees met in the Board of Trade rooms last evening to audit bills and transact the business relative to the recent celebration.

The celebration, as a whole, was one of the most successful ever held in Salem, and the committee wish to thank the many citizens who gave their loyal support and aided in the day's exercises. The various members of the committee are to be congratulated at the able management of the program, which meant much sacrifice and tireless and loyal work.

One of the unpleasant things of the committee's work was the auditing of the fireworks bill. Mr. Shipp, through whom the goods were ordered, contracted with Hitt Bros., of Seattle, to furnish the fireworks. The goods were shipped on the 25th of June, and arrived in due time, but the bill for the same did not arrive until July 6th, after the fireworks had been used. When the bill was received it was found that not only had the charges been excessive, but also goods had been sent which had not been ordered. A resolution was passed last evening condemning the business methods of the said Hitt Bros., and agreeing to trade elsewhere in the future.

A letter expressing the regrets of the committee for the misunderstanding in regard to the Chemawa boys was drafted, and ordered sent to the proper authorities.

There were 137 Chemawa students in uniform ready to march on the Fourth, but owing to a misunderstanding in the orders the boys did not get in the march, which fact the committee and all concerned deeply regret.

It was voted by the meeting to loan 25 flags to the cherry fair committee for decorating purposes.

Ole Olson was present and presented a bill for $14, which is said to be due for a speech delivered on the Fourth ten years ago. As many of the bills of this year had not been audited, Ole's claim was placed on the table.

The meeting adjourned to meet at the call of the chair.

Killed Her Husband.

A dispatch from Baker City says: Sunday morning, July 7, Mrs. Jack Hamilton in the heat of passion shot her husband, Jack Hamilton, because he struck and beat her. They are prominent people living in Pleasant Valley, about 25 miles from Baker City.

The couple had not been on friendly terms for some time. Mr. Hamilton had secured a divorce and was given charge of his property by the court. Mrs. Hamilton was still living on the place, and had prepared papers to appeal the case.

Saturday a storm occurred and blew down a fence on the farm where Mrs. Hamilton was living. Mr. Hamilton came Sunday morning to work at repairing the fence. Mrs. Hamilton passed, and after some conversation he asked why she had torn the fence down. She replied that she had not, when with an oath he struck her. She drew a pistol as he struck her again, and shot him through the left temple. Hamilton fell forward without a sound or making a step. Mrs. Hamilton returned to the house and was almost crazy, but had put her gun away and did not attempt to harm herself or anyone else when neighbors appeared. Coroner Ison and Sheriff Rand were summoned and took Mrs. Hamilton in custody. A coroner's jury returned a verdict of death caused by a gun in the hands of Mrs. Hamilton.

Two Million Dollar Crop.

Sherman county's wheat crop, if present prospects hold, will bring a return of more than two million dollars. How is that for a county of four thousand population, a per capita income exceeding $500. This is no prescription dream, either; our yield has previously passed the two and one-half million mark and study any market report for prices. For the other part of the proof visit our fields.—Wasco News.

Woodburn Cases.

It is not believed that indictments will be found in the Woodburn election cases. That is the opinion of some of the witnesses before the grand jury.

Congestion at the Cannery.

The long line of teams at the cannery, waiting to unload cherries and other fruit, is one of the sights of the Capital City. It is stated the cannery takes in 15 tons of fruit per day at present. Many of the fruit growers are complaining at the long delay in unloading. Some of the men and women, with their horses, are kept standing in the hot sun from two to five hours, and complain bitterly at this. They say if the cannery company would increase its force it could be done in a quarter of the time, and all the suffering and loss of time be avoided. It would popularize the cannery to expedite unloading.

THE CUNNING AND PATIENT COYOTE

This is the coyote: Co-yo-tay, with all the syllables, to the Mexican who named him: "Klote" merely to the American wanderer who has come and gone so often that he at last regards himself a resident stockman and farmer. It is this little beast's triangular visage, his sharp nose fitted for the easy investigation of other people's affairs; his oblique green eyes with their squint of cowardice and perpetual hunger, that should have a place in the adornment of escutcheons. It is notorious that the vicissitudes of his belly never bring to him the fate upon whose verge he always lives, and that nothing but strychnine, and not always that, will bring an end to his forlorn career. As his gray back moves slowly along above the reeds and coarse grass, and he turns his head to look at you, he knows at once whether or not you have with you a gun, and you cannot know how he knows. Once satisfied that you are unarmed he will remain near in spite of any vocal remonstrances, and by-and-by may proceed to interview you in a way that for unobtrusiveness might be taken as a model of the art. Lie down on the thick brown carpet of the wilderness and be still for twenty minutes, and watching him from the corner of your eye you will see that he has been joined by others of his brethren hitherto unseen. He seems to be curious to know, first, if you are dead, and, second, if by any chance—and he lives upon chances—there is anything else in your neighborhood that he might find eatable.

A STUFFED EMPEROR.

Fate of Valerian of Rome, Captured by the Persians.

One of the most remarkable stuffed skins on record was that of Valerian, emperor of Rome, who was taken prisoner and afterward kept in chains by Sapor, king of Persia. He was either killed in a tumult or by order of his conqueror, who was perhaps fearful of losing his valuable living trophy, in the year 269. The body of the dead emperor was treated with no more delicacy than when it held the spark of a living one. It was skinned. The hide after being tanned was stuffed, painted red and suspended in the chief temple of the capital. It remained there for many years and was the popular spectacle for holidays makers and visitors from the country. But it was put to more important ends than this. It was made a diplomatic engine of much significance and efficiency. In after times it often happened that the Roman envoys at the Persian court had misunderstandings more or less serious with the government to which they were temporarily accredited. When these ambassadors from Rome grew arrogant in their demands, it was the custom to conduct them into the presence of the stuffed skin of the ex-emperor of Rome, where they were asked if humility did not become them at sight of such a spectacle.

THE POSSIBILITIES OF GAS MACHINES

"When a man has to shovel a dollar bill into the furnace everytime he wants a dime's worth of power, he may be pardoned for harboring a germ or two of discontent with the present stage of industrial evolution," says Charles F. Carter, writing in the Technical World Magazine for May. "Yet a modern steam power plant will only deliver at the crank shaft from 10 to 12 per cent of the potential energy contained in the coal burned under its boilers. If it is a small plant, the results are likely to be the former figure or less; if it is a very large plant, conducted with unusual skill, the latter may be approximated. Corliss and quadruple expansion engines, feed water heaters and kindred accessories, and finally the steam turbine have resulted from endeavors to reduce this excessive waste of heat. Altogether they have only served to accentuate the necessity of finding something more efficient than steam to perform the functions of the world's prime mover. Recent developments would seem to indicate that a clew to this much-needed improvement has been discovered. At least it looks suspicious to find a gas engine plant of 40,000 horse-power, another of 31,500 horse-power, and still another of 21,500 horse-power in the United States, one of 31,500 horse-power in Johannesburg, South Africa, and goodness knows how many smaller ones in successful operation all over the world. And when one finds the same type of engine that is assembled in these great plants humbly doing the churning at a rural creamery, driving automobiles and motor boats and running everything else that can be run and saving money for its owner whenever it turns a wheel, suspicion almost deepens into conviction."

The Pride of Morocco.

A turn in the road suddenly disclosed to us the end of our pilgrimage. It lay at our feet, an immense mass of white dwellings, surrounded by high, gray and ruined battlements. The golden rays of the setting sun seemed to bring out in strong relief the minarets of the mosques and to bathe in a flood of light that great monument of Moroccan life. There, before us, silent, isolated and ancient, lay the highest example of Moorish civilization. And yet no paved roads led up to it. No carts or wagons disturbed the deathlike silence which covered the city. No shrieks of engines, no hum of harvesters, no smoke of factories, no signs of life, pulsating, moving, producing western life, were in evidence. We gazed long and fondly upon the picture before us and reluctantly followed our guide along the road to the gates of the city.

Our illusions of beauty and charm were soon dispelled. Outside the walls we passed innumerable camps of traders who had come from the four corners of Morocco to dispose of their merchandise. At the very gates we found great numbers of dead animals, camels, mules, horses, dogs and donkeys, abandoned by their owners to rot and pollute the air with the fearful odor of their decomposition.

The gates through which we entered the city opened on to a marketplace. Here was assembled a motley array of vari-colored humanity which would have done credit to the "streets of Cairo." Negroes, Arabs, "Berbers," Jews, Moors—brown, white and black—were squatting side by side on the edge of the road, while others, on mule or horse, slowly passed between them. Beggars, half-naked, water-carriers with pigskin bags, shoemakers, scavenger-mongers, vegetable vendors, horse traders, mingled indiscriminately. The din of the voices and conversation impossible, while the odor of the decomposing vegetable and animal filth were overpowering. We made our way through this crowd with the greatest difficulty.—From "A Ride to Fez," by Harold F. Sheets in The Outing.

Red Tape in France.

The Paris correspondent of the London Mail tells a story of a Mile. Deschamps, who when about to be married to M. Lenoir recently at La Haye Malherbe, in Normandy, discovered that the marriage would be illegal, because in the eye of the law she is a boy.

THE BRIDE AND BRIDEGROOM

The bride and bridegroom and their friends were gathered previous to the ceremony, when the village schoolmaster—who is also the village clerk and registrar of births—burst into the room, exclaiming: "The marriage is impossible!" He explained that his predecessor had mistakenly registered the birth as that of a boy, and under the registration, Mile. Deschamps would become liable to serve as a soldier this year.
