CROSSED IN CANVAS TOP PULLMAN

Anderson Tells of His First Experiences in Willamette Valley

William R. Anderson was born at a place then called Mt. Pulaski, or on a farm between Mt. Pulaski, Illinois, and Springfield, then capital and chief city of the state. Mt. Pulaski was 18 miles from Springfield, and one of the sections he has of the farm was that it was on the main road, and a favorite stopping place of one Abraham Lincoln, a prominent country-side lawyer. He was an old acquaintance of a warm friend of the father of the nation boys after whom Gen. W. Anderson of Gates was named. John and the senior Anderson did sit late into the night visiting and talking over old border state matters. Farmer Anderson was from northern Ohio, near the river, and Anderson was a Kentucky woman and her family and the Lincolns the Andersons knew many of older people from that section. He was what you would call warm and kind, and would sit up and late into the night. Lincoln was very common, as in those days he had no stovepipe hat or fine clothes, and his practice was mostly in the country towns, but he was a well known far and wide as a lawyer. Lincoln became attached to the little boy Bill, who with a great deal as a man would a kid, told him stories, and some when the house was crowded with sleeping room slept with him.

In 1852 when Bill Anderson was a neighbor's boy, Bill Engle, was 22, their fathers fitted out for the trip to Oregon. They gave them three yoke of steers, two cows, and a heavy wagon, plenty of grub. With this outfit they crossed the plains coming Oregon via the Umatilla route. When they reached Umatilla landing they had left the oxen dead on the plains, the wagon and one cow were behind, and they traded the remaining cow for a white cayuse, one of the worst kind of the buckskin variety, to carry their clothing and personal effects. September 14, they landed in Oregon City, by Barlow pass. There were then 40 houses and cabins there. It was a bigger place than Portland, and it was the only place known to the east. It was the big town of Oregon. There was one house on it now known as the east side of Portland. Lots could be bought Third street, Portland for $25, the young men hadn't 25 cents between them. Portland, was so different in those days it was not mentioned in the eastern papers, and emigrants arrived from the plains and were surprised to hear of an upstart village on the Willamette river. It was noted for many Indians going to trade.

The two young men from Mt. Pulaski, Ills., who landed at Oregon City were not only about broke but in great difficulty in getting enough to eat. So after two or three days they went up to Salem, and out to the first man who had a residence. In their case it proved to be a man named Kaiser, the father of William Kaiser of Salem, who had poles and shakes split out for a residence of about one room. He was about to erect and take place among the substantial citizens. They took the job for so much their board. To get through as fast as possible they would go to work at daylight, and as Mr. and Mrs. Kaiser were not early risers, the young carpenters were generally up by 9 o'clock when breakfast was served. If it hadn't been for a cabbage patch near by, they would have eaten the Kaisers out of house and home. As it was they ate the cabbage patch, and at times Bill Anderson says they could have eaten yellow dog. Out of those poles and shakes they put up a fairly good place for those days and it stood on the site of the present poor farm residence until that was built when it was moved back among the orchard trees, and was standing there for years since. The doors, sash, and casing were all planned out by hand. The job took them about six weeks. They next got a job building a porch and some fences for Dr. Belt, the father of Mrs. Geo. H. Burnett and Geo. Belt of Dallas. It stood northeast of where the Central school stood, and Belt was a neighbor of John C. Belle. That job lasted two weeks, and they got such pay as they could agree upon. They had no regular wages and there were no unions in those days.

In November the young men took the overland train—blankets on your back and hit the road—for Jacksonville. That was a great camp in those days. At night they would sleep in a shack or under a tree on the soft spring of the ground. They carried no guns but each had a good knife. There were plenty of Indians. Reached the camp all right but couldn't stay as living was nearly as high as at the Waldorf-Astoria and not near so good. Provisions were very high—salt worth its weight in gold dust, flour $80 to $90 per hundred—no sugar or coffee. A meal of wheat coffee, wheat hominy, and a piece of unsalted beef, $1.00. There was snow on the ground, they could get no work, so they started on foot for Port Orford. Took eight to ten days. Got carpenter work there. They were wagon makers by trade but shifted to carpentering as work of any kind was very scarce.

Anderson stayed only three weeks at Port Orford, when he worked his way out to Corvallis. England remained at the coast until spring. At Corvallis board was high and the snow was two to three feet deep. The country was nearly out of provisions for man and beast. Horses and mules were starving. They went about the streets eating each other's manes and tails off. Horses ate the clapboards off the houses, and mules ate the sashes and doors out of cabins. In the spring of 1853 Anderson went to the Chehalis valley near Dayton, where he made rails for $1.25 per hundred and his board. The rancher had a great many Mexican cattle, and butchers came all the way from Portland and Oregon City to buy beef. It was dressed on the ranch and they hauled it with wagons to the city market.

The Charming Woman

Is not necessarily one of perfect form and features. Many a plain woman who could never serve as an artist's model, possesses those rare qualities that all the world admires; neatness, clear eyes, clean, smooth skin and that sprightliness of step and action that accompany good health. A physically weak woman is never attractive, not even to herself. Electric Bitters restore weak women, give strong nerves, bright eyes, smooth, velvety skin, beautiful complexion. Guaranteed at J. C. Perry, druggist, 50c.

THAT'S THE QUESTION.

Hell or No Hell Subject of a Five Days' Debate.

Hattiesburg, Miss., July 15.—One of the hottest debates ever held in Mississippi is scheduled to take place, beginning tonight, at Friendship church, near Ellisville, the subject of controversy being "Is There a Hell?" The Rev. A. G. Strain, a Universalist minister of Alabama, will attempt to relieve the terrors of the heated season by holding that hell is a myth, while his opponent, the Rev. J. J. Porter, a Missouri Baptist preacher, will come to the aid of the weather man by holding the sulphur and brimstone idea. The debate, will continue for five days and many heat prostrations are expected to result. The verbal battle has attracted wide attention and the defenders and opponents of "hell fire" doctrines will probably attend in large numbers.

The Magic No. 3.

Number three is a wonderful mascot for Geo. H. Parris of Cedar Grove, Me., according to a letter which reads: "After suffering much with liver and kidney trouble, and becoming greatly discouraged by the failure to find relief, I tried Electric Bitters, and as a result I am a well man today. The first bottle relieved and three bottles completed the cure." Guaranteed best on earth for stomach, liver and kidney troubles, by J. C. Perry druggist. 50c.

The Hop Crop.

Oregon's hop crop will be about one-third short of last year, according to R. D. Cooper, the grower, of Independence, who has just made a journey by team, through the principal hopgrowing counties of the Willamette valley.

"South of Newberg crops look very poor," he says, "as there are a number of missing vines in every yard. The rains have not been so frequent between Newberg and Independence as they have been this side of Newberg, and it is now too late for rains to make amends this season."

"Last year Oregon produced about 150,000 bales, but if the crop of 1907 amounts to 100,000 bales, it is all that can be expected. The price obtained by producers will largely depend on the amount of hops raised in England, and as conditions are usually precarious, the English grower is never sure of his crop until it is in the bale."

Konrad Krebs, the largest hop grower in Oregon, says he expects to raise 5000 bales this year, according to present indications, and if good prices prevail the Krebs Bros. are liable to make a great deal of money.

"We have 620 acres in hops," he says, "and they all look well. We have the largest hop yard in the world, although we are not the largest growers. Our big field situated in Polk county is 400 acres in size. Horst, of California, however, leads in the amount of hops raised, as he has yards in all three of the coast states. If he has good luck Horst will have 25,000 bales of hops in 1907." — Benton County Republican.

On the occasion of a recent visit to California, Governor Buchtel created a sensation by denouncing the officials of the Western Federation of Miners and endorsing President Roosevelt's opinion of them as "undesirable citizens."

Louis J. Kruger, ex-champion long distance foot racer of Germany and Holland, writes, Oct. 27, 1901:
