

SOCIETY WORSHIPS MAMMON

I don't mean that all women hold these views, but it is curious, that people should ask one to wait until the whole mass is on one level before lifting one's voice. It would be a poor business if our florists and fruiterers adopted this principle in regard to their wares, wouldn't it? On the contrary, when I am journeying early of a morning east or west, I find the fruiterer is chucking out the rotten apples and the tainted oranges from his barrels, and that the florist is changing the water in which the flowers stand, and tossing aside all the bloom that fades, and droops, and dies. But, of course, if a priest attempts to act in any analogous way when dealing with the bloom and fruit of a higher creation he at once is pelted by all the rotten oranges, apples, and eggs that are to be discovered in the neighborhood.

But I don't value a trumpety temple shekel the praise or blame of men. Expression of opinion as to what one does may come in the form of praise; then it is a southwesterly wind. It may come in the form of blame, and then it is a northeasterly wind, but in either event it is an idle wind. I respect the voice of my conscience, which is the voice of God, before everything else on this little planet, and as long as I am on good terms with it I am as happy as a man can be who is living a life of probation, waiting for a better one to come.

Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy Better Than Three Doctors.

"Three years ago we had three doctors with our little boy and everything that they could do seemed in vain. At last when all hope seemed to be gone we began using Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and in a few hours he began to improve. Today is as healthy a child as parents could wish for."—Mrs. B. J. Johnston, Linton, Miss. For sale at Dr. Stone's drug store.

An Unreasonable Champion.

This title is bestowed on Dr. J. Starke, a German physiologist and dietist, by American medicine (Philadelphia, June). Says this journal, in discussing alcohol in its editorial columns:

"To be sure he bases his arguments on such well known facts as the presence of alcohol in the tissues at all times, and the fact that when artificially made and ingested it burns up to produce energy, but in his conclusions he is an extremist who will not receive the support of that part of the profession whose opinions are worth quoting. His denial that alcohol is never a poison is simply untrue, but it must be wormwood and gall to physiologists like Dr. Hall. He states the well known fact that alcoholism—the craving for the narcotics—is a sign of mental abnormality and weakness, but his theory that moderate drinking by the healthy never produces the habit is sure to raise a storm of protest, for facts seem to be against him.

"Condemnation of total abstinence is a risky business. There may be some who agree with Starke that small amounts of alcohol are not harmful, but when he advocates its habitual use as an aid to digestion and celebration he is on debatable and highly dangerous ground, not only scientifically, but ethically. He advocates its use to aid invention and by the very ones who appear to be the most damaged by it—the unstable neurotics who are highly gifted creators, artists, writers, and men of genius generally. It does seem that his advocacy is scientific fanaticism as harmful as that of the opposite extremists who are far from scientific. His temperance is as intemperate as that of the 'temperance' faction. A balance-wheel is needed by both. Hall advises total abstinence as a necessity for the healthy, and Starke practically advises every one to drink moderately as a necessity. When two physiologists use the same scientific facts for such conclusions, it is a scandal which reflects upon the science itself. The whole brood of dietitians are in discredit, anyhow, for the science of feeding is the host for a horde of parasitic fads from vegetarianism to 'chewing'. A house cleaning is sorely needed in and out of the universities. 'Let digestion wait on appetite.'"

"The national character is changing for the worse. There can be no doubt as to that. There is a great deal too much imported villainy from other places through Paris, and if, instead of following the example of the viciousness of these places, we imitate some of their virtues, it would be more to the point. We are altogether too fond of amusement, and as we cannot have amusement without money, money is mostly in the hands of those who will do anything to get it. We are too fond of the money that we have, and if you will observe a little dearer they will certainly turn round and reply that life is not worth living unless one can get into the swim and splash at whatever fountain they wish, and stoop to any villainy that

Gas From Cornstalks.

The success of a gas plant at Beatrice, Neb., in which cornstalks and corncobs are used in the retorts instead of coal, demonstrates that the prediction is well founded that the producer gas engine will eventually be driven by gas made from lignite, peat and other products which are not serviceable in the furnaces of power establishments. The waste materials of the cornfield are coked in the gas plant at Beatrice, and the coke is used in the furnaces beneath the retorts, to produce more gas and by-products.

The price of the best coal at Beatrice is $6 a ton, and one ton of coal will produce 10,000 cubic feet of gas. As against this cost and production it is stated that one ton of corncobs and cornstalks produces 16,000 cubic feet of gas, of a better grade than that secured from coal, and the residue is 600 pounds of good coke that can be used wherever other coke can be utilized. The cost of the waste of the corn farm is a matter that depends largely upon the haulage. Of course, if gas plants should multiply, and the demand should increase in consequence, there would be a stiffening of prices, but corn waste is bulky, and it would not be profitable to ship it over long distances unless it were first submitted to pressure and condensed into small space.

The above figures in a press dispatch from Beatrice relative to the corn gas plant which has been in operation less than two months, will give another hard jolt to the pessimists who have been predicting a comparatively early exhaustion of the coal supply.—Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin.
