Cheap Italians.

L. M. Gilbert had a small want ad in The Journal yesterday, notifying the public generally that he wanted to employ a number of people to pick prunes. Among other things the said said: "Six cents a bushel paid for Italians." This morning, on opening The Journal office doors, a young Jap showed up with a copy of The Journal, and, pointing out the line mentioned to the young lady in charge, said: "I see he offers six cents a bushel for Italians; what do you suppose he would pay some Jap boys?" The owing to the idiosyncracies of the English language, the word "Italians" meant prunes, and that Mr. Gilbert would probably not inquire into the nationality of the pickers or look at their teeth to discover their age. The Jap skipped out with a smile breaking over his brunette countenance that showed his teeth until his face looked like a comber breaking on the Newport beach.
