WALL STREET WINGES

GALAMITY HOWLERS

The Woolly West Can Now Give Back the Endearing Title to the Wall Street Brokers Who Gave It

A feeling of positive serenity has settled upon the security market. This is evidently due, for one thing, to the sedative action on the money market, of soothing contact with the Cortelyou millions which have had the effect of a hypodermic in relaxing the strain and relieving the pain. Much money had been hoarded in reserves here and there, as is always the case when an acute period is on or expected. This money has been allowed to come out somewhat since the government deposits began, and has added to the relief.

Causes.

The cashier of one of the largest New York city banks says: "The condition is clearing and confidence being restored, but this is not altogether due to deposit by the treasury, but also to the change in sentiment among the people regarding the government attitude. I have taken pains to make inquiries among bankers and business men in the interior, and find the sentiment forming that the government should let up on its attacks, and that Roosevelt is making great unnecessary trouble and not accomplishing anything; at least not anything that could not be accomplished in a quiet way. Let the government once understand that this desire for peace is popular among the best people, and it will change its methods, and relieve the business world from the barbaric warfare against prosperity and confidence, which has been carried on now for nearly two years."

Many lines of business keep at fullest figures. These, many of them, are the lines depending upon people of ordinary means and wage earners. Wages are still at highest point, and the spending of them supports business of certain kinds at full head.

Skies Only Partially Clear.

While the feeling of confidence is undoubtedly growing we have still ahead of us months filled with possibilities of unsettlement. The monetary situation looks as though it would be cared for without decided catastrophe, although without much comfort. The campaign against railroads in North Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama, is still on and presents most unpleasant features. Public demand for better facilities, accompanied by legislation cutting down receipts and making it impossible to attract investors' money for the making of improvements, is unreasonably burning the candle at both ends with certainty of bankruptcy if indefinitely continued. Meantime, state and federal courts are at odds there, and while the Southern Railway has surrendered, the Louisville & Nashville has not.

All of which makes unpleasant reading for investors, and is one of the features of the war against corporations, which has helped to break confidence. Certainly there is no endeavor in this southern campaign to install honesty in management, as no dishonesty is alleged, and yet the situation is a direct result of the example of the government. On international banker, recently returned, defines the situation as follows:

"Time for Common Sense."

"These attacks, coming at a time of international monetary stringency, and when the minds of many have been disturbed through recent disclosures, have had, and are having, a very unsettling effect on confidence. This agitation has already resulted in a good deal of hasty legislation against railroads in various states which together with the fear of more hostile measures, has accentuated the fall in the prices of securities by which millions of innocent holders of small means have suffered severely; and, secondly, these attacks have injured corporation credit, and more especially railroad credit, to such an extent, that the companies find themselves in a serious predicament, not only as to raising the money required for ordinary expenditures, but even more so meet the extraordinary demands for extensions and improvements due to extraordinary development and industrial activity.

"Shippers and people generally are certainly justified in insisting on additional facilities, but it does not seem wise for them or others to at the very same time curtail the companies' revenues, increase their expenses, and hurt their credit. They should not allow politicians to do so any longer."

"If the new conception and enforcement of the Sherman anti-trust law in continued, with its retroactive effect on many matters which have been allowed to be done, and had practically been condoned, and if the general attacks on capital are allowed to continue, confidence will be more and more shaken, and the inevitable result will ultimately be lack of employment and suffering of the working class. * * * *"

"Personally, I am a firm believer in the common sense of the people of the United States. * * * *"

"The time is now at hand to use it."

The Addie Roper Murder.

Bellingham, Wash., Sept. 13.—A strong chain of circumstantial evidence is being woven around William Dell, accused of the alleged murder of Addie Roper here last January. The state has secured the admission of the testimony of Dr. Sutherland, who examined the woman's body. He claims there was another motive for the murder of the woman and burning the house, to hide a crime, instead of robbery, Rae Brown is to be brought here, as she has said she would tell the story which, it is believed, is of as great importance regarding the details as that of Harry Watts, who is charged with being an accomplice.

STATE OF OREGON AND MARKET

Hops Less Than Average Crop the World Over and Low Prices

The Waterville Times and Hop Reporter says:

Our local market continues in a dull, unsatisfactory condition and there has been just enough pressure to sell to keep values unsettled and weak. The few dealers who have been willing to operate would buy only when real bargains were offered hence the business was made up quite of these "scalping" purchases. So far as State 1906 hops are concerned values are almost nominal, and while we make no further change the figures quoted would be difficult to realize. A sale of 150 bales of good California hops is reported at 5 1/2 c, and it is understood that more can be bought on about that basis. Some dealers here are getting consignments from farmers on the coast, who are not willing to sell out there at the ruling prices. The new crop is being harvested in spots, and picking will become general next week. Telegraphic reports from Oregon are that the quality will be very mixed, with the average not as good as expected. Reports of lice come from this state, especially from Osego county, but the attack is not serious, and the weather is favorable to the growing crop. The yield will be light in some sections, while in others the prospects are good.

Hop conditions in England are generally about as described in the following from two districts:

Maldstone and District—Generally the gardens look strong and healthy, there being very little vermin and no serious symptoms of mold. But the development of the hops is slow, as a result of the more or less sunless days and cold nights. It does not seem possible that the crop can reach the average.

Farnham—The warm days and nights which are so much desired to bring the hops to perfection are still wanting, with the result that the growers are becoming despondent. The bines could not possibly look more healthy and vigorous, and they are fairly full of bloom. Warmth is the one thing now required, but that seems denied, and it is not likely now that the yield will be an average one. Picking will commence the first week in September.

New York Notes.

The Oneonta Herald, August 29th, says: It is estimated that the State hop crop this year will not exceed two-thirds an average growth. Owing to the dry weather, a red rust has struck many yards, and picking on that account has begun. There is also considerable vermin, but no mold is reported. No sales hereabouts as yet.

The Schoharie Republican, August 29th, says: Several yards of early hops will be finished picking this week. Erskine Borst, local dealer, says: "The crop is coming down light but of good quality." He estimates the crop at "two-thirds of last year's crop." Picking will be on in full blast next week.

The Morrisville Leader, August 29th, says: The hop harvest on several farms near Morrisville will be commenced this week. The crop will be a No. 1 in quality, and free from vermin, and although light in yield, should bring the grower better than 15 cents.

The Cooperstown Journal, August 29th, says: The local hop market remains inactive, with no sales reported.

DURBIN HOP HOUSE BURNED

Two Kilns, 22,000 Pounds Cured Hops, Warehouse and Baler Destroyed

The hop houses of Frank W. Durbin, on Howell Prairie, were found to be on fire at 7:15 this morning, and were completely destroyed, with 22,000 pounds of cured hops. He lost two double kilns, a warehouse and hop baler, valued at $2100, with $900 insurance in the Butteville Mutual Insurance Company. He says none of the men are to blame. The head dryer was Dan Fraser. Mr. Durbin will also lose about 1000 boxes of hops that he cannot dry. His total loss of hops will be about $3750, as he had them contracted at from 12 to 15 cents a pound.

He does not think his contracts will allow him to substitute other hops for delivery. He says he could replace them for seven cents.
