They report that many of Portland business people will come up on Portland day to attend the fair. Some Big Corn—

This morning two enthusiastic corn growers met at the Salem Board of Trade rooms, where they had deposited some samples of corn. The first was John Ferguson, of Polk county, who brought in some fine specimens of white corn. The stalks were thirty and about eight feet tall, and each contained a couple of good ears. Next came Mr. Achilles, the noted alfalfa grower from Kalse Bottom. He had some stalks that measured about 10 feet, and also had two heavy ears each. The gentlemen compared notes and found that both had White Elephant seed from Kansas, and, judging from their products, it is no wonder that they are enthusiasts on raising corn in Oregon.

Carl Abrams left last night for Southern California, as a representative of the Pacific Homestead. He will be away several weeks.

BENTON COUNTY EXHIBIT

Two Carloads Are Tied Up in the Albany Freight Yards

Professor Lake, of the State Agricultural College, and County Fruit Inspector French, of Benton county, have been doing some of the tallest metaphorical swearing, if not actual stunts in silent profanity, over the non-arrival of two carloads of exhibits that are tied up in the Albany yards. These cars were ready to go out of the yards at Corvallis Wednesday at noon, but today had not gone out of Albany. One carload carries the college exhibit, which is to be exceptionally fine this year, and the other car carries the Benton county fruit display. The fruit exhibit was largely made up of the school fair display, and both carloads are to be attractions at the greatest state fair. Prof. J. C. Bridwell, of the O. A. C., department of zoology is here to attach some labels and is also on the anxious seat about the delayed cars.
