LINCOLN.

He was the Southern mother leaning forth
At dead of night to hear the cannon roar,
Beseeching God to turn the cruel North,
And break it, that her son might come once more!
He was New England's lover, pale and pure,
Whose gallant lover fell on Shiloh's plain—
He was the North, the South, the East, the West,
The thrall, the master, all of us in one.

—Selected.

A VANCOUVER VIEW.

The racial trouble in Vancouver will focus the attention of the British empire on the Asiatic question as nothing else has done, and for this reason it is regarded by the Vancouver World as an evil with an element of good in it.

The World argues that if the people of Vancouver are quite candid about the matter they must admit "that, had the parade ended in nothing more than the making of speeches and the passing of resolutions, the London papers would not today be discussing the Asiatic question as if it were a matter of dire import instead of A QUESTION TO BE DISPOSED OF WITH A FEW WORDS ABOUT IMPERIAL INTERESTS AND THE NECESSITY OF RECOGNIZING THE HIGH-SPIRITED ORIENTAL RACE WHICH HAS BECOME THE ALLY OF GREAT BRITAIN."

"It is, of course, not good that this should be so, but let the blame be put where it belongs.

"And it does not belong to Vancouver as a city."

So Vancouver resents the idea that the city is responsible and would place the blame higher up.

The World insists that the Bellingham outbreak was the more serious because the Asiatics were hunted by the mob.

But even the demonstration that did occur in Vancouver would not have occurred "had the attention been paid to Vancouver's grievance which is now being paid to it, and had previous public meetings and previous complaints not been apparently ineffective."

The World even goes so far as to congratulate the city because, "by comparison with what happens in other cities in times of popular excitement, she has a record to which few places so cosmopolitan in character can point."

It is argued that it was entirely safe for the Asiatics to appear on the street the morning after the demonstration against them, and that, "FOR THE FIRST TIME SINCE SHE BECAME A COLONIZING POWER, GREAT BRITAIN REALIZES THAT HER COLONIES ARE NOT MERE PAWNS ON THE INTERNATIONAL CHESSBOARD AND THAT NO TREATIES WILL HOLD THEM STILL WHILE THE ORIENTALS SWARM OVER THEM."

It has at last dawned on Ottawa, London and Washington that this is no mere question of Transvaal miners against the Chinese, California labor unions against the Japanese, or Vancouver workmen against both the Hindus and boot, but that all are phases of a world issue—THE CONTINUED PREDOMINANCE OF THE WHITE MAN IN THE FACE OF THE ECONOMIC COMPETITION OF THE ASIATIC."

All this is in sharp contrast with the notion that the Englishman ever preserves a calm demeanor and is the last man on earth to engage in any demonstration marked with violence.

The most marked Englishism in the comments of the World is the assumption that Vancouver is not as blameworthy as Bellingham on this side of the line.

It brings a broad smile to a citizen of the United States.

DENATURED ALCOHOL.

Now that the new regulations for the manufacture of denatured alcohol have gone into effect, it becomes possible for farmers to take up the manufacture of it.

The regulations that govern licensed distilling have been modified to this very end.

It is not probable that the distilling of alcohol will for years, if ever, come to be a customary occupation for the individual farmer any more than the making of dairy products does.

In the general progress of agriculture, however, there has been evolved a cooperative effort in certain lines; and the country creamery, serving all the farmers of a community, is one of the up-to-date evolutions.

It is probable that the distilling of alcohol for mechanical uses will begin at the point where butter-making have arrived.

A DENATURED ALCOHOL DISTILLERY CONVENIENTLY LOCATED FOR THE FARMER, FROM WHICH ITS RAW MATERIALS OF GRAIN, FRUITS AND VEGETABLES ARE TO BE GATHERED, WILL BE AS NATURAL AN OUTGROWTH AS THE STARCH FACTORIES IN A POTATO DISTRICT; and it should prove just as valuable an outlet for the culled, the damaged and the supernatured products of the acreage served.

CARRIED TO EXCESS.

Great harm is done to the cause of union labor by such an attitude as was taken by rival unionists at a funeral in New York the other day.

THE FUNERAL WAS DELAYED AS A RESULT ONE ROUTE.

On no other theory can one understand the indifference to the feelings of the mourners than that the drivers come to look upon funerals in a matter-of-fact way and give little thought to the sorrows.

It was not a strike for higher wages, like that in Chicago a few years ago which threatened the public health by the postponement of funerals.

The New York affair was a controversy among drivers of different unions.

One set of drivers belonged to the United Teamsters' association of Brooklyn, other drivers belonged to the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, and still a third set belonged to the Liberty Dawn association.

The United teamsters, after the coffin had been carried out of the church and placed in the hearse, refused to start their teams because of their feeling against the International teamsters.

And so the matter stood. The drivers were implored to proceed, but they were obdurate.

Finally a liveryman owning some of the teams was sent for.

He could do nothing, and he sent for the police.

A captain and ten patrolmen appeared and read the law against delaying a funeral.

The surly drivers then consented to move providing THE DIFFERENT UNIONS TOOK DIFFERENT ROUTES TO THE CEMETERY, WHICH WAS DONE.

The great body of union labor is not in sympathy with such conduct.

"Regular as the Sun"

Is an expression as old as the race. No doubt the rising and setting of the sun is the most regular performance in the universe, unless it is the action of the liver and bowels when regulated with Dr. King's New Life Pills. Guaranteed by J. C. Perry, druggist, 25c.

The Study of the Stars.

"The ancient philosophers," declared Sir David Gill in his presidential address to the members of the British Association at Leicester, "were confident in the adequacy of their intellectual powers alone to determine the laws of human thought and regulate the actions of their fellow men, and they did not hesitate to employ the same unsupported means for the solution of the riddle of the universe."

"Every school of philosophy was agreed that some object which they could see was a fixed center of the universe, and the battle was fought as to what that center was. The absence of facts, their entire ignorance of methods of exact measurement, did not daunt them, and the question furnished them a subject of dispute and fruitless occupation for twenty-five centuries."

"But astronomers now recognize that Bradley's meridian observations at Greenwich, made only 150 years ago, have contributed more to the advancement of sidereal astronomy than all the speculations of preceding centuries. They have learned the lesson that human knowledge in the slowly developing phenomena of sidereal astronomy must be content to progress by the accumulating labors of successive generations of men; that progress will be measured for generations yet to come more by the amount of honest, well-directed and systematically discussed observation than by the most brilliant speculation; and that, in observation concentrated systematic effort on a special thoughtfully selected problem will be of more avail than the most brilliant but disconnected work."

"By these means we shall learn more and more of the wonders that surround us, and recognize our limitations when measurements and facts fail us."

"Huggins' spectroscope has shown that many nebulae are not stars at all; that many well-condensed nebulae, as well as vast patches of nebulous light in the sky, are but incandescent masses of luminous gas. Evidence upon evidence has accumulated to show that such nebulae consist of the matter of which stars (i. e. suns) have been and are being evolved."

"The different types of star spectra form such a complete and gradual sequence (from simple spectra resembling those of nebulae onward through types of gradually increasing complexity) as to suggest that we have before us, written in the cryptograms of these spectra, the complete story of the evolution of the evolution of suns from the incandescent nebula onward to the most active sun (like our own), and then downward to the almost heatless and invisible ball."

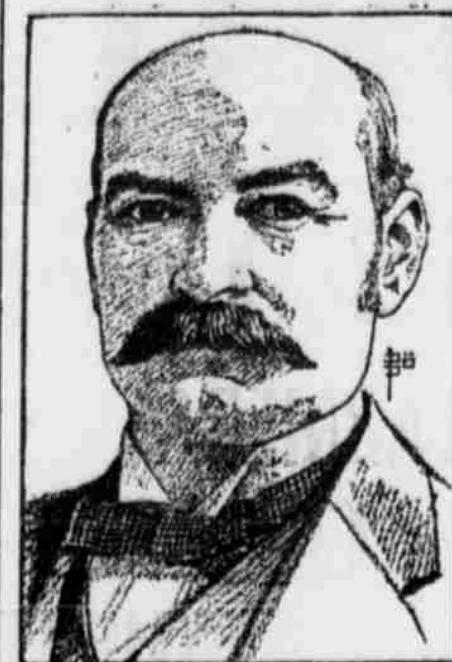

"The period during which human life has existed on our globe is probably too short—even if our first parents had begun the work—to afford observational proof of such a cycle of change in any particular star; but the fact of such evolution, with the evidence before us, can hardly be doubted."

"I most fully believe that, when the modifications of terrestrial spectra under sufficiently varied conditions of temperature, pressure, and environment have been further studied, this conclusion will be greatly strengthened. But in this study we must have regard also to the spectra of the stars themselves."

"The stars are the crucibles of the Creator. There we see matter under conditions of temperature and pressure and environment, the carlely of which we can't hope to emulate in our laboratories, and on a scale of magnitude beside which the proportion of our greatest experiment is less than that of the drop to the ocean."

"The spectroscopic astronomer has to thank the physicist and the chemist for the foundation of his science, but the time is coming—when almost see it now—when the astronomer will repay the debt by wide-reaching contributions to the very fundamentals of chemical science.—London Chronicle.
