of warning must be spoken, that the very short woman should have none too much fullness at the bottom of her skirts. With this costume was worn a hat of milan straw dented to suit the wearer's face and trimmed with great bunches of loops of brown ribbon. Brown shoes and stockings, and gloves in brown lace, and a cream white umbrella finished the outfit.

Another pretty costume worn by a very young woman was of linen in a creamy buff shade trimmed with bands of white French embroidery. The skirt was seven-gored and plaited, a box-pleat at the center of the front and one at each side, with side plaits between. The skirt attains a measurement of five yards with the plaits drawn out. The jacket which is of the Eton variety is especially youthful in its style with the long dropping shoulders effect gained by tucks wide on the shoulder and narrowing towards the waist. The three-quarter sleeves are inserted into the armholes by means of tucks and while full on the upper arm, from the elbow down the close fit is obtained by means of tiny tucks. The front closing is made with hooks and eyes and decorated with two rows of enamelled buttons showing iridescent tints. A finely embroidered collar and cuffs of white handkerchief linen gives an immaculate finish to a very natty costume, the design of which could be used in many other combinations of linen or wool.

It is not in white alone that the linen suit is seen, for linens in many shades are used, and linens almost as soft as silk are to be found in many designs, checks, blocks, stripes and with borders that are particularly handsome for trimmings.

Several afternoon costumes that especially took my fancy must be given you. One was of a soft shade of pink neither too bright or too light in tone to lose its pretty effect of trimming and style. The material was louisine made up over a satin lining for some of these soft goods are much more effective when made up over a satin lining than the stiffer silks; and it is always well before buying the lining for a dress to study its effect together for a fine finish may be wholly lost by putting in a wrong style of lining—and this has nothing to do with the price either.

A smart and graceful flare was given to the skirt by means of the peculiar cut of the nine gores, while the top has a smooth adjustment over the hips a requisite of all well-fitting skirts. The open V front of the waist, which is a modification of the surplice, is finished with embroidered bands that form a plastron below the bust-line. Lace may be used to form the chemisette, collar and cuffs. The peculiar beauty of this costume lies in the shirred shoulders which gives just the required fullness to the fronts. The sleeves are shirred at the inside seams. The chemisette and the collar close in the back, the former fastening to the lining at the back.

An afternoon costume intended for the races, was of striped lavender mousseline over white linings. Eleven gores were used to develop the skirt, which fits smoothly at the top flaring sharply below and the lower edge measures four yards and three-quarters in the medium sizes. Two straight bands of embroidered silk in a darker almost purple shade decorate the bottom of the skirt. The over-b blouse was distinctly stylish with the seam on the shoulder left open for a short distance showing the lingerie blouse sleeves beneath. The right front laps over the left. The jumper is attached to the wide belt, a band of the darkest embroidered silk decorate all edges and forms the belt. Three large silver buttons fasten the fronts. White lace gloves, a parasol of the purple shade, lace covered and a white hat decorated with purple and white violets, and puffs of white tulle complete the costume. White kid shoes and stockings are an accompaniment.

This last design is one that could be employed in many fabrics of wool, voile, serge, mohair; in cottons, as pique, repp cloth, yamagatha; or it may be most effectively used for all the silks and a costume of taffeta in dark blue, or a rajah in brown would be very serviceable during the early autumn, and their trimmings could be cut from embroidered goods, bands of panne velvet, Persian bands, etc., and with umbrella, hat, gloves, and other accessories in keeping and harmoniz-ing a most useful and modish costume would be at hand for all but the most ceremonious occasions.

Summer is over the season of dainty gowns and frocks and of all sorts of pretty and beautiful fabrics. The dotted goods are very fashionable this year and adults are wearing them just as frequently as the younger children. One of the goods that has been particularly favored this summer is the dotted batistes, some of these are as fine as silk and as shimmery in effect, and in nearly all cases are made up over silk. One of these for a garden party was of a very light almost green shade of champagne and dotted with white silk dices. A soft shade of lavender silk was used for the foundation while filet lace was used as the trimming and a sash of Dresden ribbon showing violet tints on a white ground gave a pretty and dainty finish.

Crippled and Burned to Death.

San Bernardino, Cal., Sept. 21.—Five men were killed this morning when a runaway freight train through the Cajon pass crashed into a light engine near Devore station, wrecking the locomotive and many freight cars. The dead are: Engineer Stratton and brakemen Ray and Bryan. Two tramps were injured and fireman E. Thresher sustained a fractured skull. Fire broke out in the debris and the fireman and tramps died in the flames.

The city jail is filled with weary ones, some suffering from vicarious sunstroke from getting too near the electric lights, some who labored hard at the bar and rested from their labors in the alleys, some who had taken a drop too much and some who had taken from a bucketful to a barrel more than they needed, some who had been elevated, and ranging down through the degrees of intoxicated inebriated, jagged and dead drunk. They will all get over it.

more than often the better dressed woman, for after all through, reason, appropriate disposal of means is a greater factor in good dressing than money alone.

Never was there so much license allowed women in the matter of dress so much chance for expressing personal lines, but beneath all is the law composed of so many elements summed up in the phrase "good taste."

Each morning as I took my walks through the streets, by the beautiful mansions, over by the race course, down by the water, I was impressed by the importance of the linen and silk suits. In the case of the latter there was a time when a silk dress was entirely out of place for the morning walk, but today it is one of the most serviceable and appropriate materials for the morning dress providing it is of the right kind of silk—taffeta, rajah, pongee or foulard; and it is worn not only in the morning but in the afternoon and evening as well, by economical dressers, the difference of time being emphasized by accessories and style.

A particular fetching morning coat suit constructed of brown rajah was seen the first morning after my arrival. The coat was made after the "Chesterfield" model, so called because of certain folds introduced at the side seams. It is also a semi-fitting model, a style much favored just now as it is exceedingly cool and pretty for summer days. A dart in each front extends from the shoulder and terminates above the bust, and a small pocket is inserted in the left side; and there are pockets below, lap-covered. A notched shawl collar in white linen stitched in brown and straight cuffs are a stylish addition, while large white pearl buttons complete the coat. The skirt is of a most excellent style both for silks or sheer materials; it is a design also that is well adapted for the woman who is plump about the hips as the plaits are stitched for considerable depth producing a fitted effect at the top, and a full shirt below measuring almost six yards at the lower edge. Just one little word
