THIS WAS THE SONG.

We have forgotten. This the rowers knew,
 Straining within the galley's reeling night.
 Life gent to breaking, while their great souls grew
 Strong in the ancient purpose of Time.
 This was the song whereby they made their fight.
 Laughed as they swung. Gods! how the cord bit through!

This was the song the pagan lovers heard,
 Wakened by flowers in a rose-red dawn,
 Through the bright dew they fled, like ocean stirred
 With morning. Bare and beautiful they ran,
 Holding each other's hand. Through leaves they're gone,
 Cleaving the silver pool with flash of bird.

Carven in stone, Abydos holds it fast—
 The little Eastern dancer with her lute,
 Wild Erin's fairies crying for the past.
 They keep the deathless secret of the word
 Hid behind Nature's lips, who, grave, remote,
 Guard from this profanation till the last.

Not unto us who bide the ebb and flow,
 The senseless order of the tide of law,
 We have forgotten to be free, we know
 Only the iteration of the day
 The priceless moon, white pearl without a flaw,
 Drowns in the muddy stream of worldly woe.

We take the petty part and leave the whole,
 Lost to our ken the song of Nature's youth—
 The great barbaric winds that sweep the soul
 And leave it emptied of a self else but truth.
 —Helen Hay Whitney in Baltimore Sun.

THE PROSPERITY OF OREGON COLLEGES.

Probably no denominational college in the northwest is making such headway as Willamette University at Salem. Since 1902 her progress and growth has been constant and substantial.

The number of her students has grown greatly from year to year and her equipment in buildings and apparatus places the historic institution in the forefront of western universities.

Though nurtured in the cradle of Methodism, Willamette University is not a sectarian institution but it is the devotion of Methodists and the loyalty of its alumni that is bringing "Old Willamette" to the front.

Last week in Grace Methodist church in Portland in an outburst of loyalty which has never been equalled in the history of northwest Methodism, the Oregon conference pledged more than $80,000 as an endowment fund for the old college.

State Senator Robert A. Booth, of Eugene, who headed the list with $10,000, has in the past made several large gifts to the institution and he is hailed by the student body as the university's great friend.

In the onward march of education in Oregon Willamette University is followed closely by her sister denominational institutions, Pacific university at Forest Grove, Pacific college at Newberg, McMinnville college at McMinnville and Albany college at Albany, are all entering INTO GREATER SPHERES OF INFLUENCE and the friends of those institutions are giving nobly of their money that the equipment of these colleges might be adequate to the needs of a growing state.

Oregon has a right to be proud of her colleges and Oregon PARENTS SHOULD SEND THEIR CHILDREN TO OREGON COLLEGES.

They owe it to the state in which they live. Oregon college trained young men make good in eastern colleges and demonstrated that the training received in the colleges of this state is equal to that received in eastern institutions.

The above editorial is from The Dallas Chronicle. There should be added to the list the United Brethren college at Philmoth, and the Catholic colleges at Mt. Angel and Portland.

His Dear Old Mother.

"My dear old mother, who is now 83 years old, thrives on Electric Bitters," writes W. B. Brunson, of Dublin, Ga. "She has taken them for about two years and enjoys an excellent appetite, feels strong and sleeps well." That's the way Electric Bitters affect the aged, and the same happy results follow in all cases of female weakness and general debility. Weak, puny children too, are greatly strengthened by them. Guaranteed also for stomach, liver and kidney troubles, by J. C. Perry, druggist, 50c.

Hard Times in Kansas.

The old days of grasshoppers and drouth are almost forgotten in the prosperous Kansas of today; although a citizen of Codell, Earl Shamburg, has not yet forgotten a hard time he encountered. ORIGIN OF THE SWASTIKA.

Prineville Woman Says Arizona Aztecs Used It First.

Though thousands of people wear the little swastika pins, but few know of the origin of the little emblem. According to Mrs. George Millican of Prineville, who has been here today, the swastika cross is derived from the Aztecs or other tribes that inhabited Arizona in the prehistoric days.

For many years Mrs. Millican was in the government Indian service in Arizona. While there she visited the ancient ruins at Casa Grande and noticed that much of the ancient pottery was adorned with the emblem, of the present day swastika. By the modern Indians of Arizona it is held that the emblem was generally used by their forefathers as it is used today, in the belief that it brings good luck. They themselves use it generally upon the pottery and baskets which they now make.—East Oregonian.

Astronomy and a Girl.

They were enjoying a quiet stroll out under the star strewn veil of evening, and he, bashful youth, eagerly grasped a stray opportunity to keep alive the languishing conversation.

"Yes, Miss Georgiana, that star over there is the planet Jupiter, which, they say, is about 400,000,000 miles from the earth, and that bright red planet overhead is Mars, which just now is only a little over 40,000,000 miles away. It's a great question among scientists whether or not there are inhabitants on either of them."

"Well, George," said the fair listener, in her thirst for astronomical knowledge drawing a little closer to her informant, "if there really are it doesn't seem to me they're near enough so that they could see us on a dark evening like this, even though they were looking this way."—Judge.

A Scholarly Wit.

The quick mind of the late Dr. Haig-Brown, master of the famous Charterhouse school, in London, was ever ready to seize upon an absurdity, and give it a witty turn.

A fond parent once wrote asking him to "inter" her son at Charterhouse.

"Dear Madam," he wrote back, "I shall be most happy to under take your son."—London Telegraph
