This lack of the artificial and the theatric at first gives an imprestion of slowness, and one must get into the real atmosphere before one can fully appreciate all that the playwright has accomplished.

One other remarkable feature which makes "The Three of Us" unique is that it is a western play which in the past we had come to believe were indispensable. There is no use made for firearms, no introduction of red-skins for the sake of local color, no drinking bout, no unruly cowboys, and no murder. Miss Crothers does not see fit to call into use a background of moutain neaks and deep ravines, for she is able to The Eugene Register has these make you feel the bigness and For Sale-Five-acre tract, all clear kind words for "Thorns and Orange breadth of these people of the west Blossoms," which is at the Grand without resorting to the employment opera house tonight and Saturday of familiar tactics. He comes to her to tell her that he has come across an abandoned claim in which he has discovered a rich vien. It adjoins a claim owned by Mrs. Bix, an eastern woman, who has become disguted with her non-success and is anxious to sell out and return east. Mrs. Bix gives a dinner party in honor of a captthrough good fellowship to receive a favorable offer for her mine. Clem overhears Steve's recital of his find and also hears that Trenholm is going to make Mrs. Blx an offer that evening at the dinner. Accordingly, the boy sells his secret to Berrusfordd, and the latter goes to Mrs. Bix and buys her claim, while she is ignorant of its real value. When to make his offer, Mrs. Bix has nothing to sell, and the capitalist, believing he has been imposed upon and been made the victim of a trick, refuses to buy the Townlet and Maccheeney claims, as he had promised. Berresford has told Rhy that he is the purchaser, but he has imposed a stlence on her. Therefore when Steve is accused of double-dealing by Trenholm. Rhy alone, who could elear him, is silent. Steve sees that there is some compact between Berrestord and the girl, and he untatrusts Rhy's love. At the hour of midnight Rhy goes to Berresford's her promise. While there Steve comes also, and a strong scene ensues. Rhy finds Clem's watchfob on the floor, and it suddenly dawns on her that it is her brother who has traitor, and, to save the family honor, she refuses to give Steve any explanation of her pres-

She goes home, only to find Clem preparing to leave home and to strike out in the world with the money he had received from Berresford. After much persuasion and a final Enlargedappeal to his manhood, and for his protection, she prevails on him to stay, and, with the coming of morning Steve returns, all is made clear and everything ends happily.
