SECRETARY CORTELYOU SPEAKS IN NEW YORK.

Head of Financial Treasurer Declares the Financial Storm Is Subsiding.

(United Press Leased Wire.)
New York, Nov. 14.—For the first time since the present financial trouble, Secretary of the Treasury Cortelyou this afternoon, at the Merchants' Association celebration, publicly discussed the financial situation. He said in part:

"We have learned something recently by the trying experience. We have learned the value of credit in the business world and of the corporation. If any man is guilty of violation of a trust making him amenable to law we feel confident the process of the law will be evoked. The New York banks have evoked in the past three weeks the severest tests they have ever undergone. What they have done to stay the panic will be approved by the Republic. Now that the financial storm is subsiding, we should turn our attention to a relief of the country at large, the South and West and on the Pacific coast. In other sections of the country are heavy demands for the movement of crops. We believe that if the money now hoarded would be circulated there would be a resumption of business within 24 hours. A panic in legislation is worse than a business panic. The various plans for currency reform must be subjected to rigid scrutiny in the great field of legislation. We need fewer and better laws, better enforcement and amendments to existing statutes that are admittedly defective, and will do much to point out the limitations and define the liabilities. We need more co-operation among our great enterprises."

Stenographer Lost Her Voice.

One of the saddest misfortunes that has been reported for some time is that of one of Salem's most accomplished stenographers who is employed at the court house.

She has been in the best of health and spirits for many years, up to the time this sad misfortune befell her, which occurred at 9:10 o'clock a. m., when it was discovered that the young lady had lost her voice, and could make no kind of speech, and used only the gestures of the mute.

It was not thought to be serious until telephone calls, official calls and business matters in general made their appearance, but with no answer from the young stenographer. Then active measures were taken to restore the power of speech. Hon. George H. Burnett was called to adjudge whether or not she could ever regain her voice, but gave no definite decision. It was thought useless to call a doctor as she did not seem to be suffering from any other ailment than "non vox," and other officials around the court house seemed content that she remain silent. This, however, was not satisfactory to a few disappointed attorneys, who tried several methods of making the young lady talk, for all attorneys know that when a lawyer or a woman is speechless the situation is serious.

Later Judge Burnett decided that perhaps the young lady had a proposal and that it affected her power of speech so seriously in accepting, that it might be wise if Miss A. McCulloch would take out an endorsement policy with the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York in favor of the proposer.

This firm is represented by Lauderdale & McCulloch.

INTERESTING NEWS

FROM DRY TOWNS.

Some who were at Eugene Saturday declare the city was practically run wide open during the day, and students got their liquors over open bars, almost regardless of age, almost an utter disregard of law. The paved streets and street cars looked fine, but this lawlessness was considered a mighty bad example for a university town.—Albany Democrat.

While the local option law is violated in Eugene much as it is in Albany, the above statement of the Democrat is an exaggeration coming from a town that has just had a wholesale expose of its blind pig operations. However, if the Democrat can produce the evidence to substantiate its declarations, it will be doing Eugene a favor.—Eugene Register.
