The original instructions were carried out to the letter and congratulations were mutual. All concerned were heartily glad that the diamond had left South Africa.

Some months later the postmaster general for the Transvaal, in his report on the postoffice, read at the legislative council at Pretoria, astonished the council, and, indeed, the whole of South Africa, with the announcement that the diamond had been safely conveyed to England as an ordinary registered package.

The postmaster general did not publicly divulge the contents of the parcel which was so zealously guarded by the detectives. It was not the diamond, and the public had been genuinely "bluffed."

It is unwise to mention the Cullinan diamond now to the detectives who spent two sleepless nights watching over the brown paper parcel.—London Chronicle.

Artistic Street Lights in Cities.

In the current number of Municipal Engineering Magazine, City Engineer Edwin A. Fisher of Rochester, N. Y., describes some of the few attempts at artistic use of street lights in the United States, a subject in which San Francisco is much interested at present.

One of these is Los Angeles, where the start was made at private expense. The city electrician of Los Angeles reports as follows:

"The first lighting by incandescent lamps on ornamental posts on our business streets was taken up by the merchants and property owners on Broadway working under their organization known as the Broadway Improvement association. This association, by means of subscription from property owners and merchants along the street raised funds for installing 135 cast iron ornamental posts. These posts are located at about 120-foot intervals along each side of the street and originally had installed an aggregate of 384 candle-power incandescent lamps. This would be equivalent to nearly 37 arc lamps per block, there being twelve posts per block on this particular street.

"The cost of lighting these posts was assumed by the city. The experiment was tried of reducing the aggregate candle-power one-half, with very satisfactory results, the general effect looking down the street being practically the same.

"An act was passed by the state legislature enabling property owners to institute proceedings for improvements of this character.

"The three other principal streets upon which the ornamental posts are now installed used the assessment method and it has been very satisfactory in operation.

"We have two general types of posts, the four-arm and the six-arm, with sixteen-inch or eighteen-inch top globe. The six-arm post consists of three 32 candle-power lamps in the 18-inch top globe and one 16 candle-power lamp in each of the 8-inch inclosed frosted globes. The four-arm post contains three 8 candle-power lamps in each 12-inch globe on the arms and three 32 candle-power lamps in the 16-inch top globe. It is my belief that in view of the rapid improvements being made in the incandescent lamps, both as regards efficiency and candle-power, the lighting of streets, both in the business and residence section, can be done quite economically considering the artistic effect that can be obtained with ornamental posts and incandescent lamps."

Mr. Fisher also presents a report from Denver regarding the ornamental lighting of Sixteenth street, one of the main business streets. He says the posts were designed to furnish a support for the span wire of the electric railway system and also to provide for carrying the feed wires on top, as well as to provide for the ornamental lamps. The poles were set at a distance of about 90 feet, on each side of the street. Eleven blocks were so lighted at a uniform cost of $60 per lamp, under a provision of the Denver Gas and Electric company. The expense is borne by the city at large. The total cost of equipping this street was about $16,000. The merchants of other downtown streets are insisting that the new municipal lighting be extended to other principal street of the city.

In Cleveland, Or., the lighting of the downtown streets is taken care of by the abutting property owners of business firms, costing the abutting owners about $3 per front foot per year. The lamps are arc lamps 220 volts, hung in pairs and spaced about 190 feet apart.

Rochester, N. Y., has had its principal main street lighted for several years with arc lamps hung in pairs on iron poles used generally with the railway company as trolley poles. These lamps on Main street are spaced about 100 feet apart on each side of the street, and present a very brilliant appearance. This lighting is paid for entirely by the city at large.

Buffalo, Syracuse and some other cities light the main streets in a similar manner.

The public lighting commission of Detroit, Mich., says the tower system used by the city in connection with the street lighting is a unique feature. These lights may be seen many miles. There are now 135 towers in use from 100 to 165 feet in height.
