THE STAR ATTRACTION THIS WEEK

James T. Powers, the star of "The Blue Moon," began his theatrical career as the call boy at the old Globe Square theater about twenty years ago. His attention to business soon made it possible for him to assume minor roles, and his attempt at singing was to give an imitation of Gus Williams, the James T. Palmer, famous German singing comedian. Powers made an instantaneous success, and for a couple of seasons devoted himself exclusively to musical work. And ever since then American people have demanded that he should confine himself to musical comedy. For seven seasons he was the star comedian of the Augustin Daly Musical Comedy Company, in addition to which he has originated sixty-eight important musical comedy parts. In England he is as great a favorite as in America, although over there they are very willing to accept him in dramatic work, in which he is legitimately very funny and very clever. The past two years Powers has been well placed in the star parts in "The Geisha," "A Runaway Girl," "The Jewel of Asia," "San Toy," "The

Frank Litchfield Well Again—
Frank Litchfield, the genial and efficient rural mail carrier of R. F. D. No. 4, is again able to take up his work, after a short illness.

Clara Palmer, in "The Blue Moon," "Runaway" and other important productions, but in all his entire career he has never had such glorious opportunities or such a wide scope for his talents as in "The Blue Moon."

Powers is a trained athlete and a good dancer, his grotesque dances calling for special praise. He has a most peculiar and characteristic quality of voice, and while certainly not posing as a vocalist is capable of proving most entertaining in a vocal way. His methods are clean and concise and on all occasions he refrains from burlesque, incongruities, that are an insult to one's intelligence. Every actor hopes, in their own language, to find their great play some day, and if the opinions of our esteemed contemporaries are of any criterion, Jimmy Powers must have found his great part in "The Blue Moon," for the universal opinion is "Jimmy Powers has at last found a part commensurate with his abilities." "The Blue Moon" will be seen at the Grand opera house this week.
