THE SALARIES OF NATIONAL CONGRESSMEN

An election to congress will be regarded henceforward as much more desirable than ever before, thanks to the recent increase of the salaries of members by 50 per cent.

Seven thousand five hundred dollars a year is an income large enough to furnish a strong attraction, independently of the glory to be gained through the exercise of an opportunity to legislate for the nation.

As a matter of fact, there was small justice in the plea that $5000 was not an adequate salary for a congressman—a fact which becomes manifest when it is considered that the work required extends over only six months in the year, the balance of the twelve months being so much leisure available for utilization in other activities.

In urging the passage of the bill to raise congressional salaries, one argument used was that Washington was an expensive place to live in. The truth is, however, that such is very far from being the case. Apparently, the Capital City has acquired this reputation through the circumstances that people are constantly going thither on holiday-making trips from all parts of the country.

There is a widespread popular impression to the effect that congressmen are obliged to keep up a fashionable position in Washington. Nothing, however, could be further from the truth. Senators and their families are "somebody," if they choose to be, and happen to have money to spend in entertaining; but members of the house, as a rule, are not encountered in the fashionable drawing-rooms of the capital.

There are a few representatives who are conspicuous in the society at Washington, but the fact has nothing to do with the circumstance that they are in congress.

The necessary expenses of congressmen are cut down to a minimum. Not long ago each representative was provided by the nation with a secretary at $100 a month; and at the present time two great apartment houses are in process of erection, at a cost of $5,000,000, one for the senate and the other for the house in which luxurious private rooms will be set aside for the use of every legislator.—Rene Bache in Lippincott's.

The Louisiana Canebrakes.

The canebrakes stretch along the slight rises of ground, often extending for miles, forming one of the most striking and interesting features of the country. They choke out other growths, the feathery, graceful canes standing in ranks, tall, slender, serried, each but a few inches from his brother, and springing to a height of 15 or 20 feet.

They look like bamboos; they are well-nigh impenetrable to a man on horseback; even on foot they make difficult walking unless free use is made of the heavy bush knife. It is impossible to see through them for more than 15 or 20 paces, and often for not half that distance.

Bears make their lairs in them, and they are the refuge for hunted things. Outside of them, in the swamp, bushes of many kinds grow thick among the tall trees, and vines and creepers climb the trunks and hang in trailing festoons from the branches. Here, likewise, the bush knife is in constant play, as the skilled horseman thread their way, often at a gallop, in and out among the great tree trunks, and through the dense, tangled, thorny undergrowth.

In the lakes and larger bayous we saw alligators and garfish; and monstrous snapping turtles, fearsome brutes of the slime, as heavy as a man, and with huge horny beaks that with a single snap could take off a man's hand or foot.

One of the planters with us had lost part of his hand by the bite of an alligator; and had seen a companion seized by the foot by a huge garfish, from which he was rescued with the utmost difficulty by his fellow swimmers. There were black bass in the waters, too, and they gave us many a good meal.

Thick-bodied water moccasins, foul and dangerous, kept near the water; and further back in the swamp we found and killed rattlesnakes and copperheads.—Theodore Roosevelt in Scribner.
