This license can be considered as having practically gone into effect as the council has passed it as a whole, and as it was drafted by the mayor, who deserves credit for it, he is not likely to veto it unless there is some defect in the wording.

The meeting of the council adjourned from Monday evening met last night. The entire council for the first time was present in full.

A number of accounts of small sums of the treasurer were transferred to the general fund as these accounts had not been used or disturbed for some years.

Treasurer Frank Meredith, at his own suggestion, will have his books experted according to a motion introduced by Councilman Greenbaum.

A sealed bid was received from Rawlin K. Page, of the Portland Railway, Light & Power company, for the improving of State street between Twelfth and Commercial at a rate of $4.20 per square yard for the work on either side of and between the rails of the above company in accordance with the specifications on file. This bid, which was merely formal as the Railway company has to pay for the work, was accepted. A bond was required of Page to equal the amount of the bill.

A letter received by the council from P. S. Knight, enclosing check to pay his last assessment on the Court street improvement less $9, which he had to pay for such work as was not attended to by the contractor in front of an alley between Liberty and High streets.

A resolution was next carried ordering the Portland Railway company to lay planks along their rails in the Highland avenue addition, it being claimed that at present they are practically impassable.

The street committee concluded its report for the evening with a number of resolutions, which passed, ordering sidewalks laid in front of divers pieces of property the owners of which had failed to comply with the order of the council given more than a year ago to this effect. The charge will be assessed to them.

The street commissioner was instructed by the council to examine and report on condition of sidewalks, a number of which are badly in need of repair.

A roast was given the butchers by the council last night for allowing their wagons to come into the city with a cloud of flies and dust settling on the meat. The health committee were instructed to warn such as were guilty of this negligence.

A motion to have the city engineer lay the first monument to mark street crossings at the corner of Sixteenth and D streets has passed.

A resolution from the Board of Trade was read asking that the Oregon Electric company be compelled to run its line through the public streets instead of private property. The same was placed on file and will be investigated.

The protest against the improving of Liberty street between State and Chemeketa streets was placed on file with the street committee.

The mayor's veto message on the $600 liquor license was here read in full. Before the veto was put to a vote, at the suggestion of Alderman Stockton the order of business went on to "new business," which enabled the council to hear the reading of the new ordinance on the liquor ordinance before voting on the veto.

The new ordinance was read the necessary three times and, at the motion of Greenbaum, the council went into a committee of the whole to discuss the bill.

Mayor Rodgers then resigned the chair to Greenbaum. Councilman Moores made a motion fixing the license for saloons at $800. He had scarcely finished when Radcliffe suggested $600. Frasure then rose and made a still further amendment tht the license be $500, giving as his reason that the restrictions, which were excellent, were so closely drawn that their profit would be much reduced.

Stolz followed backing up the $500 amendment. Radcliffe again took the floor and backed up his $600 amendment saying the saloons should be a matter of revenue and that a monoply should not be given a few as would be the case if the $800 license passed.

Moores then informed the council that he had had correspondence with 20 different cities of the Northwest and that the glass front was an improvement not had by any of them.

Presnall gave a red-hot anti-saloon talk saying he thought the saloon-license should be prohibitive.

Councilman Goode stated that, while he was a prohibitionist, if he had to draw a saloon license, he would have drawn one such as was under consideration. He stated he was in favor of $1000, but of the new ordinance would pass, he would compromise at $800.

Councilman Low, for the first time breaking silence, suggested that the saloon question be left to the vote of the people, and that he thought the council should not legislate them out of business.

Stockton, answering a remark of Radcliffe to the effect that the laws would probably be enforced anyway, complimented the administration, of which he is a member, as being the best ever had here. He also suggested that the saloon question be left to the vote of the people in a few months and not to force the liquor dealers out of business. He stood by the new restrictions but suggested the $600 license.

Goode made the remark that he was opposed to high license saying he was an auctioneer and that an auctioneer was the next thing to a saloon keeper and that he had been barred out of business by high license nine years ago. Moores and Frasure finished the discussion. The council (always as a committee) now opposed all licenses except the $600 and they were lost.

The club license came up next and some warm talk was heard during which the motion for the license ranged from $600 to $100.

Councilman Eldridge stood opposed to the club license (aimed at the Illihee club) first on the ground that a license could not be collected against a club; second'y that a club did not allow people to get drunk. He was roundly roasted for this partiality by Councilmen Goode, Frazure, Radcliffe and Stolz. Special attention was called to the restrictions to be placed on saloons and that they should be protected and that favoritism should not be shown the club. The $300 license carried by a big vote.

Alderman Goode next made a motion for licensing restaurants at $300. This carried without much opposition and with only a remark or so from the prohibitionists.

The beer halls license passed rapidly at $400. After a litt'e jolly confusion, the drugstore license was fixed at $200. The limits in which liquor can be sold was reduced to within a boundary of the following streets; north of Trade; south of Marion; east of Front and west of Trade.

The committee then adjourned and the council, proper, ratified the ordinance.

An amendment was then suggested licensing wholesale liquor dealers, and the matter passed while the amendment was written. During the interim several other matters were taken up and passed by the council.

The new amendment to liquor ordinance was here submitted by Eldridge fixing wholesale dealers' license at $300. This was reduced to $100 and passed.

The bill passed the entire council with the exception of Presnall, who voted no. As a final can to the liquor matter, the veto of Mayor Rodgers on the $600 license was sustained as a matter of form.

A few minor bills for street improvements were acted upon and passed, and the council hastily adjourned at 11 o'clock p. m.

Death Was On His Heels.

Jesse P. Morris, of Skippers, Va., had a close call in the spring of 1906. He says: "An attack of pneumonia left me so weak and with such a fearful cough that my friends declared consumption had me, and death was on my heels.
