ANNING SECOND PLACE FOR HUGHES

(United Press Leased Wire.)
New York, April 13.—The same old politicians, save those that have been eliminated by the hand of Roosevelt, are now planning the maneuver with Charles Hughes as the pawn in the game. The vice presidential boom for Hughes was inaugurated by his ennoblement before the chair of the Republican state convention fallen on the motion for admittance.
William Barnes, Jr., of Albany, frankly brought the subject into the range of public discussion by declaring that it is the intention of the Albany organization of New York to support the honor upon Hughes. Barnes declares that Hughes can no longer hold it than did Roosevelt in

REAL ESTATE DEALER DISAPPEARS AT SPOKANE.

(United Press Leased Wire.)
Portland, April 13.—At noon Saturday, A. C. Parsons, a wealthy real estate dealer of Spokane, stepped off a car at a crowded junction point and disappeared into the crowd. Today the entire detective force of the city is out searching for him. It is feared that he is wandering among the hills west of the city or that he may have taken his own life.
Parsons came to Portland recently to secure relief from a heavy mental strain, caused by an over strict application to his business. His wife fears that his mind may have failed him suddenly and that he is now helpless.

LACK OF RAINFALL IN EASTERN OREGON

Pendleton, Or., April 13.—Lack of rain fall in eastern Oregon is causing the death of thousands of lambs and it is expected that 60 per cent of the lambs will die.
The attention of the state wool growers commission has been called to the mortality among the lambs and an investigation will be made. The ewes can get no food on the ranges and the owners are making feverish efforts to get their flock on the forest reserves.

BOY IS ACQUITTED OF KILLING SISTER

Portland, Or., April 13.—The coroner's jury has acquitted young Rodney Durst, aged 16, of all blame for the death of his sister Lucile, aged 9, who was shot and instantly killed by Rodney late yesterday while the latter was enjoying a target practice in the back yard. Young Durst has wished to go hunting but his parents had refused consent. He then constructed a target range and was doing some fancy shooting when Lucile walked into the line of fire. A bullet struck her in the heart and she died instantly.

"HENRY"

gan to file into Marion Square; by 2 o'clock every available place to sit was occupied and by 3 o'clock the park was occupied by those standing clear outside to the sidewalk on the east side. A few of those on outside left during the address and when Henry stated, at 5:30 o'clock, that he had kept them longer than he intended, having been talking two hours and 20 minutes, they arose en masse and shouted for him to go on. When he finished at 6:20 p. m., a rush was made for the stand and many good government enthusiasts crowded into the small area to shake the "great prosecutor" by the hand. It was 20 minutes later before the crowd about him, would let Henry depart.

The introductory address was given by H. L. McMahan, who consumed a few minutes only explaining the good work done by Mr. Henry in different parts of the country.

Henry began his address, upon observing two little tots in front of the audience, that it was the youth of today that the country could hope in, as they were the men of tomorrow. From this he cited the story told by Judge Ben Lindsay, the famous juvenile judge of Denver, of how three little boys were brought before him charged with burglarizing a boxcar for some watermelons. How he, Lindsay, upon investigating had found how the children's father had been killed in a gasworks explosion and they were forced to be thieves. Henry here took advantage of the opportunity to urge the necessity of an employers' liability act and at the same time to grill those responsible for declaring the recent one illegal. Then returning to the reason of the children cited in Judge Lindsay's story, he said: "The reason of these children stealing is because they have seen the police stand in front of a gilded dive in which gambling was going on, and by that were taught no respect for the law."

Henry went into a detailed explanation of the treatment he had received while prosecuting criminals; of how when they went after the little fellows they were patted on the back by the newspapers; the merchants; the millionaires and in fact the public generally, but how when they indicted Calhoun, the millionaire owner of the San Francisco railway system, the "good citizens" held up their hands and said, "It's an outrage." Henry flayed the Oregonian, and told those who did not believe this to be the fact, to read yesterday morning's Oregonian and see how he was roasted.

"You don't know what you've got in the direct primary law and Statement No. 1," was Henry's opening remark in regard to the present political situation. "Statement No. 1 has broken the shackles from you and you are free men today," he continued amid a loud applause. Resuming, he said,—"You can nominate whom you please and elect whom you please and if you don't get good men, it is your own fault."

Henry volunteered the information that he would be unable to say to what party he belonged, but added, "I believe in the doctrines of Roosevelt, and I stand for Taft, who I think believes as I do in the sincerity and good work of President Roosevelt."

"I find grafters in both parties. I do not believe in the kind of Republicanism that Fulton does; nor do I believe in the Democracy of Senator Bailey of Texas."

Attention was called during the address to the danger the United States is in at the present time from corruption; and that it has not only just been discovered but was mentioned in James Bryce's American Commonwealth way back in 1888. Speaking in this vein, Henry stated: "You read in the papers of the anarchists through the country,—but the danger is not from them, it's from the laboring man out of work, for the first instinct of nature is to eat, and if men are starved they will take food by force."

"During the beginning of the panic the government issued one hundred and fifty millions of new money; there are six men in the United States who control five hundred millions each or together three thousand millions. Think of it,—within 90 days these men could withdraw double or triple this amount from circulation. Imagine this. The trouble is that the wealth is getting into the hands of the few, and as this keeps on those who are out of work will keep thinking that the wealthy should divide with them.

Theodore Roosevelt started this war (on the grafters) and I have enlisted under his banner to fight to the end,—not for two years but to the end." (Applause.)

Henry devoted a great deal of time discussing the San Francisco situation. He said in speaking of the supreme and appellate courts of California, who reversed the decisions setting Schmitz and Ruff practically free,—"that he did not say that all of the justices were corrupt, but that some of them are and he was prepared to prove it and would soon."

Finishing, he said,—in speaking of those who were opposing him, "We're in this fight to stay and I will devote the rest of my life to rooting out political rascality and they can't stop or ruin me for it."

A long and continued applause was given Henry after concluding and the grandstand was filled with those who were anxious to personally express their sympathy with the "great prosecutor."

During the speech, a note was handed up on the stand reading,— "a rumor is current that Governor Chamberlain has hired Mr. Henry to come to Oregon and speak." Replying to this voluntarily, though the note was not addressed to him, but handed to L. H. McMahan, Henry said:—"Neither Governor Chamberlain nor any other man has money enough to hire 'Mr. Henry' to make a speech. I came to Oregon to speak as a matter of principle."

A large part of his speech was devoted to Senator Fulton but nothing new was brought forward.

Henry is the guest of Banker A. Bush, with whom he has a close and friendly acquaintance through the late Judge Bellingier and Judge Gilbert. He will remain in this city until this evening leaving on the 5:40 train for Portland.
