It's all our Summer goods and a lot of oddments and endments of staple lines, emphasized our words with radical price cutting, and they move. Why the goods couldn't find owners quicker if they tumbled off our shelves and rolled out of doors, so anxious are shoppers to own them, at move on prices. Only a few days more. Don't delay. Don't say "soon" soon will be too late. Take warning, come right away.

BANKER EXPERT TESTIFIES

prosecution, stated that "the bailment followed the money," that it was not to be spent, according to the law, no matter whose hands it was in, and that "ignorance of the law is no excuse;" that by the evidence introduced it had been shown that Ross and the other indicted officials had held a controlling interest in the board of directors and were responsible for everything done by the bank—otherwise, no one was responsible for what unlawful act was committed in the name of the bank. Judge Burnett overruled the objection, and the second attempt on the part of the defense was quashed.

The defense first called Decater and Lawson, and proved by them that the money had been paid into the bank by checks on other banks. Ross was then called to the stand and asked one question by McCamant, outside of some merely perfunctory ones. This one question was: "Did you ever convert any of the state money to your own use?" To this Ross answered as if he had learned it by rote, "No sir, not a dollar." Upon cross-examination, he was decidedly evasive and in reply to numerous questions as to the amount of state money on deposit in the bank, he refused to commit himself, always stating and repeating, "The books will show."

Arguments by Counsel.

The argument to the jury by the attorneys began at 9:30 o'clock this morning after T. T. Burkhardt, treasurer of the defunct bank, had been placed on the stand by Attorney McCamant for the defense.

An attempt was made by McCamant to elicit from Burkhardt that the Oregon Trust company failure was the cause for the crash of the Title Guarantee & Trust company and the subsequent drawing of the state funds, but Judge Burnett sustained an objection interposed by District Attorney Manning that it did not make any difference why the money was drawn out if it had been converted.

District Attorney Manning opened the argument for the defense with a passionate address and at times labored under such exertion and excitement that the perspiration poured down his cheeks and he had to stop mid-way once to ask the bailiff to get him a glass of water so hoarse had he become. His speech, in part, was as follows:

"The defendants have furnished the evidence for their conviction themselves. The books, as stated by Ross, himself, and the other witnesses, show violation of the law which says that the educational funds are irreducible. It says that the money in the educational funds can be loaned in but one way,—and that is on land.

"It is not my duty to prosecute men who are not guilty, but what I mean to show you, gentlemen of the jury, is this,—that it does not make any difference how they get that money or what they did with it. The very moment that they did not have that money when the demand was made upon them—then and there they violated the statutes. I will ask that when Mr. McCamant comes to explain and justify the position of his client, he explain the action of the defendant in drawing $270,000 of that school fund. Mr. McCamant has made a great legal fight for his client and should be commended for it, but I am going to present to you a copy of the record of the books of the company, and let him explain how these sums were drawn from day to day until there was something over $73,000, out of the $288,000, left in the bank.

Used Fund for Expense.

"This record shows net cash on hand $382,099; they took out $274,088 when they closed their books and paid their current expenses up to that time. Had they a right to take this money out of the school fund—your money and my money—that $274,088 any more right than you or I had to take it. That money was taken from the State of Oregon gentlemen of jury, took this money from you and from me. They had no right to take the money to pay their debts or anybody else's debts. They tried to shift the blame on to the corporation, the Title Guarantee & Trust Company. A corporation cannot take anything—the men controlling the corporation was responsible. Now Ross and the other indicted officials were in control and were responsible for the taking of that $288,000. I don't mean that they took it to supply the wants of their table, but what I do contend is that they took it to take care of their misguided bank.

"The answer to the demand of the State Treasurer for themoney was that the bank was closed and right on top of that on September 6th they took $182,000 right out of the vaults.

Steele Scorched.

"The testimony of State Treasurer Steele shows that he made demand upon them. Sheele, though state treasurer of this state, when asked questions by us forgot everything that was beneficial to the state's case, but when he was turned over to the defense, he became as bright as a dollar. We have had criminals and criminals in this state before, but never a Thorburn Ross, nor a Barkhart, nor, sorry as I am to say it, a George A. Steele. Steele, the elected and acting treasurer, sworn to do his duty—there on the stand forgot everything of benefit to us. When he went into office, he gathered the money of this irreducible school fund from the different banks and placed it in the Title Guarantee & Trust company, one of the most insolvent banks in the state of Oregon.

In his preoration, Manning stated: "I don't know how many criminal cases you have sat upon, but I don't doubt you have found poor unfortunates guilty, who have had more of a justification for committing a crime than this defendant."

Kaiser Argues.

Wm. Kaiser, for the defendant, followed quickly on the firey address of Manning, in part, as follows: "After listening to the eloquent address of Mr. Manning, I realize that I should allow some little time for the effect of his eloquence to be dispelled. Mr. Manning suggests in his address that because of having the case transferred to this county, there must be something wrong with the defendant, but I would call the jury's attention that a majority of the judges of the circuit court in Portland realized he couldn't secure a fair trial in Multnomah county because of prejudice and bias and for that reason had it transferred.

"Gentlemen of the jury, they haven't even show evidence here for the basis of a civil suit, and you cannot find the defendant guilty unless you are convinced beyond a reasonable doubt.

Kaiser then went on to plea for his client, "as a man with a family; passed the meridian of life and on the western shady side of the hill, which leads to the unknown.

Manning and Kaiser were both censured by the court for using the expression "pentecentiary" to the jury.

McCamant began his argument shortly after 11 o'clock this morning and had just begun when the court adjourned for the "lunch hour." He continued in the same strain as Kaiser, urging that it would be terrible to "find that poor old man guilty." He also called attention to the omission of the names of Frank A. Warren and Wm. N. Ladd in the indictment, although they were on the board of directors. McCamant talked well into the afternoon and was followed by Judge Pipes, who closed for the state.

ABE RUEF JURY

aid the Oakland police department in every way possible, but the services are not needed.

Great crowds of people gathered around the wrecked home all day long, viewing what is left of the front part of the building, which was almost entirely blown away. It could not have been more completely wrecked. Gallagher was about the scene of the explosion most of the day, being congratulated by the narrowescape and declaring that he is now more determined than ever to give testimony in the trial case.

Mrs. Gallagher, who was sitting in her bedroom on the second floor with her husband when the dynamite or nitro-glycerine was exploded, has almost recovered from the shock.

The members of the family of H. H. Schenck, brother-in-law of Mrs. Gallagher, who were at the dinner table at the time, received many messages of congratulation during the day. That not one of the nine occupants of the house was seriously injured is considered remarkable in view of the damage done.

Although the explosion occurred at 7:25 o'clock last night, which was still light, no one who saw the perpetrator of the crime place the explosive on the front porch of Schenck home, where Gallagher and his wife have been living for some time, could be found today. It is the opinion of the police that the dynamite or nitro-glycerine was placed between the storm door and screen. The explosion was so terrific that no trace of a fuse could be found in the wreckage today.

Captain of Detectives Peterson said today that he thought he knew what inspired the dynamiters to end the life of Gallagher, but he would not discuss it.
