PORTLAND CRIMINALS WHO KNEW THEIR VICTIM MURDERED A PAWNBROKER

(United Press Leased Wire.)

Portland, Or., May 2.—That the two men, who so fiendishly murdered and then mutilated the body of Pawnbroker Nathan Wolfe at 8 o'clock Friday evening at his store on First street and then rifled the safe of about $1500, were Portland men and well known to their victim, is the present theory of Chief of Police Grützmaier and Captain of Detectives Bailey.

Practically every plain clothes man in the Portland police force is out on the case today. A large force of regular officers have been brought in from their outside beats and detailed on the case. The police are shadowing two men, local thugs, who are suspected of knowing something of the dastardly work, if not being actually implicated in the murder itself. One of these men, it is said, was recently deeply involved in a burglary of the same nature in an eastern city but the evidence against him was not sufficient to cause the police to make the arrest.

Wolfe was closing his store when the murder occurred. The two men entered and apparently engaged him in a moment's conversation. At that time he was placing his jewel trays in his safe. Then the two shots were fired, the second of which buried itself in Wolfe's neck. The shock, instantly killed, according to City Physician Zelgler. The body was then dragged into a rear room and the head carefully laid upon a sheet of oil cloth. This done, the murderers took up a hatchet and hacked the head into an almost unrecognizable mass.

Leaving the body, the two men evidently ransacked the store. In their search one of the men jerked his collar from his neck and with it a brown tie. This is the most important bit of evidence the police now have in their possession. The deed was not discovered until shortly after 8 o'clock when Special Officer Robinson entered the store and made an investigation. At that time the murders must have been gone for 20 minutes.

The murdered man had been a pawnbroker in Portland for 25 years and was wealthy.
