THOUSANDS VIEW

The smaller towns, within a radius of 100 miles, were practically depopulated, while from the larger cities came thousands of people.

In the city business was practically at a standstill, the saloons and restaurants being about the only establishments open for the day. The strangers had a hard time securing their breakfasts, many waiters refusing to work, preferring to see the ships more than to earn a day's pay.

Goat Island, in the middle of the bay, directly in front of the city, from which the best view of the incoming fleet and its maneuvers before anchoring could be had, was the mecca for thousands of people living across the bay. For five hours ferry boats plied their way between the Oakland shore and the island, taking at least 1000 passengers on every trip.

A conservative estimate placed the number of visitors on both sides of the bay at 250,000.

"Up Anchor."

At 11 o'clock the haze had lifted and the sun shone occasionally. The sea was quite heavy and the bay was choppy. At 11:15 the signal "up anchor" was flung out by the Connecticut and almost simultaneously the anchors came up and the Connecticut started off, followed at safe intervals by her sisters and the spiteful looking torpedo boat destroyers.

Immediately upon receipt of words that the fleet had started the ships of the Pacific battleship fleet and its torpedo boat destroyers with the auxiliaries prepared to fall into the big parade and the patrol boats steamed up and down the sea way line to keep the launches and excursion boats within the limit prescribed for them.

As Evans' ships got fairly under way they presented a beautiful sight. Their great bows nosed through the water like knives, throwing up a great spray that washed back on the bulging white sides of the mammoth armor clad. Steaming slowly, they gave the sightseers on the beach an excellent opportunity to witness their passage into the Gate.

As the Connecticut arrived in front of the military reservation, the guns of Fort Baker and the Presidio roared out their salutes. The speed of the Connecticut was slackened a bit while it was passing the forts and all of the vessels behind her slowed up. Like giant swans they glided over the waters, their steadiness of formation arousing the highest admiration, and completing a marine picture beyond compare.

The torpedo boat destroyers steamed along on the port side of the bigger ships and were almost completely hidden from the view on the San Francisco side.

As the Connecticut reached Alcatraz island she let go all of her turret guns in reply to the salutes of the forts. The great ship was almost hidden behind the great clouds of smoke belched by the monster cannon. Turning into the north channel, the 16 ships, with the torpedo boat destroyers still steaming on their port side, sailed past Angel island, where the Pacific fleet of battleships and cruisers, the Pacific torpedo flotilla and the auxiliaries were waiting for the order to fall into line, which came immediately after the last ship in the Atlantic fleet had cleared the island. With clock like precision the waiting ships fell into line and then in squadron formation, the combined fleets continued the journey past Mission rock and maneuvered back to their anchorages.

GREWSOME MYSTERY

placed over the two bodies before the dirt was shoveled over them.

The body discovered this morning was horribly mutilated and its sex cannot be determined.

A human rib and several other human bones were found nearby. Ahsie Helgaline, brother of Andrew Helgaline, whose body was found on Tuesday, today turned over to the state's attorney a number of letters written to Andrew by Mrs. Guinness. The missives, which were written in Norwegian, are full of endearing terms and expressions of love. In one letter Andrew is asked to bring with him when he came to the farm all the money he could and they would beautify the home.

Anton Olson and daughter, father and sister of Jennie Olson, Mrs. Guinness' servant, today identified the body of the young woman exhumed on Tuesday as hers. There was an affecting scene when father and daughter gazed on the corpse, the father almost collapsing. Mrs. Christoferson, who lives near the Guinness farm, told the sheriff today that a year ago she saw a strange man, wearing a fur overcoat enter the Guinness home. He became Mrs. Guinness' hired man, but later disappeared. After his disappearance Mrs. Guinness wore the fur overcoat, explaining that the man had given it to her.

Shortly after Mrs. Christoferson stated, a large man, wearing a heavy red moustache appeared at the Guinness home. Three weeks later he disappeared. Mrs. Guinness explaining that he had answered one of her matrimonial advertisements but did not suit and left.

Two weeks later, a lumberman, who was reported to have been from Wisconsin, went to the Guinness place, but disappeared a few days later. Mrs. Guinness saying that she had dismissed him upon learning that he had two children, one of whom was a cripple. The officers believe that three men were murdered and that their bodies will be dug up on the farm.

Another theory advanced by the detectives is that Mrs. Guinness was alone in the commission of the supposed crimes. It is known that the woman frequently inserted matrimonial advertisements in the Chicago and Indianapolis papers, but apparently all of the men that answered in person were "unsatisfactory." It is the belief that Mrs. Guinness' aim in getting men to her farm was not to find a husband, but to kill and rob them.

Lamphere, the suspect, refuses to make a statement and there is no direct evidence against him. When arrested he merely asked if Mrs. Guinness and her children had escaped from the house.

Chicago Investigation.

Chicago, May 6.—To determine the cause of the death of Max Sorenson, the first husband of Mrs. Guinness, the coroner of Crook county has decided to exhum the body. Sorenson died under mysterious circumstances in Austin, a suburb of Chicago, several years ago, leaving a life insurance policy for $3500, on which his widow collected in full.

La Porte, Ind., May 6.—As the hours go by the Guinness farm horror increases and the detectives working on the case believe that before their work is done they will have unearthed one of the greatest crimes since the days of H. H. Holmes.

The search of the farm was continued throughout the night and this morning the sixth body was dug up. That other bodies will be found they have no doubt.

The principal clue to the mystery that officers are now working on is based on the statement of an expressman to the effect that during the past six months he delivered five trunks to the farm. The detectives are now almost convinced that the farm was a clearing house for a band of murderers and that Mrs. Guinness shared in the spoils acquired through the crimes.

To offset this, however, it is known that Mrs. Guinness made her will a few days before she and her three children were burned to death in their home and made provision for her burial. The woman had complained to the police of the attentions paid her by Ray Lamphere, her former chore man, who, his discharge, continued to about the farm. She shared phere with having threatened burn her home, but Lamphere is in custody, stoutly denying threat.

Another theory is that Mrs. Guinness and her three children were murdered by her supposed accomplices and the bodies tried to hide crime.

Weary Bridget—
A Weary Willie in petticoats arrived in the city yesterday afternoon over the Southern Pacific line, and for a time the novelty of the wayfarer caused no little stir among the local people, especially the custodians of the law at the sheriff's office, who were about the first to receive the news, and thinking the feminine traveling agent may have been a man in disguise, Deputy Sheriff Esch was at once on his way to meet her out near the fair grounds, that being the place she was last seen by some railroad men. Esch made sufficient inquiry to satisfy him that the woman was the real thing, and escorted her to the city, where she is desirous of obtaining work.

Suit to Cancel Deed—
Mrs. Naomi Cleaver has brought suit against T. L. Ambler to cancel a deed covering a small tract of land near Mt. Angel on the grounds of failure of consideration and fraud. Patronizing Home Industry—
The Oregon Sienna Mineral Paint company of this city is one of the most enterprising firms in western Oregon. It has grown from a small concern to one of the largest manufacturing plants in this city. The company has always advertised patronizing home industry and now it is practicing what it has advised others to do. When it became necessary for it to have a fine large dray to use at its branch in Portland, The Union Paint Co., Sales Dept., instead of having it made by Portland, it is having it made by Geo. Jacobs of this city, at his shop on Front street. Mr. Wyant of The Oregon Sienna Mineral Paint Co. said the company was going to spend its money in Salem whenever it was possible to do so. The dray, which it is having built, is as fine as can be manufactured and will be a credit to the company and an advertisement to the city of Salem when it is seen on the streets of Portland.
