CITY COUNCIL LAST NIGHT

At the city council meeting last night there was just enough friction to break the usual monotony of a gathering of city fathers. The report began with the refusal of the council to grant Max Buren's application to repair a wooden building on Liberty street, once occupied by Chinese, and ended with councilman Stoltz's vigorous but unsuccessful attempt to settle the matter of granting a new franchise to the Oregon Electric railway company.

P. H. D'Arcy and Max Buren, owners of abandoned Chinese dwellings on Liberty street, were present in the interest of their respective wooden shacks to which they were desirous of giving a new lease of life. Mr. Buren's petition was turned down by the committee on health and police in the following manner:

"We, the committee on health and police, to whom was referred the matter of remodeling the building of Buren & Hamilton on Liberty street for Hyde Bros., would report unfavorably on same and recommend that no alteration or repairs be allowed on said building, as it is unsightly and a disgrace to the city."

Before Mr. Buren could remonstrate the council had accepted the report, and Chairman Radcliff of the committee then suggested that perhaps Mr. D'Arcy had something to say in behalf of his property.

D'Arcy sprang to his feet, and the council expected to hear a denunciation of its action. But instead D'Arcy stated that he would not present his application to repair his wooden building, but would begin at once the construction of a handsome brick building which would be a credit to the city. He then delivered a speech on boosting, and sat down amid the applause of the councilmen.

Buren then delivered a post-mortem address upon his wooden building, which did not savor so much of boosting. This led to more remarks by D'Arcy, and the debate finally closed by each gentleman trying to outdo the other in building future brick buildings.

The bill to grant the Oregon Electric railway company certain new franchises in Salem was returned by the committee, and another bill introduced. The new bill called for franchises on Mill street from High to Liberty, and for a franchise for 75 feet of track from Mill street on High.

Councilman Stoltz strongly advocated the granting of the franchise and moved to resolve the council into a committee of the whole and settle the matter at once. The council was resolved into a committee, and for an hour a heated discussion followed. Representatives from the railroad company were present, but as the debate proceeded it became evident that the franchise would not be granted, and these officials did not present their case. The matter was finally referred to the committee on fire and water.

The claim of Mr. Regelman for $50 damages on account of his daughter, who sustained a broken arm by riding off the sidewalk on a wheel at the corner of Mill and Winter street was referred to the city attorney.

The committee on streets recommended that the bids of the Warren Construction company for paving Commercial street from Trade to Center be accepted.

Other business of importance was the action of the council in compelling the owners of the mill ditch on Division street to put in a new bridge over their right of way on High street, and in voting to lay an eight-inch sewer on High street between State and Perry, which sewer will drain the property owned by the Masonic order on State and High streets, and for which that order has agreed to pay half the expense. The cost of the sewer will be about $585.
