OBJECT TO DIPPING OF HORSES

(Pendleton Tribune.)
 In the Indians on the reservation have been moved to petition the Father at Washington to permit them to enjoy a few of the liberties which they have not already derived.
 Ma-Pine, No Shitt, Amos and Bond, Charley Shaplich and Gilbert Minthorn were some of the prominent Redmen who took in the pow-wow recently held in Pendleton, and which resulted in sending to Washington of a petition. Nor did the copper colored owners waste their time by dealing with the Indian office or with any lesser dignitaries. The petition was addressed directly to the Secretary of the Interior.
 In making all this hubbub was the recently promulgated by Major McFatridge, the Indian agent at the reservation, that all the Indian's horses and horses should be dipped in an effort to eradicate the malarial germ.

 This order was made, it is understood at the instigation of the bureau of animal husbandry. However, the Indians pointed to the fact that Dr. McClure in a published interview had stated in effect that the efforts of the bureau to stamp out disease among the Indian's horses been rendered nugatory by reason of the inability or unwillingness of the state veterinarian to co-operate with the government. The federal man was quoted to the effect that the horses belonging to the whites living in the immediate vicinity of the reservation were in just as bad condition as those of the Indians, and that it would do little good to dip the latter's horses, if the former's were permitted to go as they were.
 Seizing upon the published statements of Dr. McClure as justification for their position, they contended that it was unfair and unjust to the Indians to compel them to go to the trouble and expense of dipping their horses, unless their paleface brothers were also compelled to do so.
 Anyway, and on general principles Lo was opposed to dipping, arguing that his horses had always served their purpose.
 Moreover, Uncle Sam's wards had diverse other complaints against the agent, all of which were embodied in the petition to the secretary of the Interior.
 They claimed that Major McFatridge had designated the old agency as the point for dipping. They objected to this location on the ground that it was too far from their horse range; that their horses were wild and untamed and that it would be a difficult task to bring the animals there for dipping.
 Another roar the Redmen leaders registered against Major McFatridge was that he had forbidden them to sell their horses, presumably before they had been dipped. According to those who met here and sent the petition, the agent had threatened to send any Indian to jail who sold his horses without first securing his consent.
 Some weeks ago this matter came to a head. The Indians were having their round-up under the leadership of Gilbert Minthorn, round-up boss. As his customary horse buyers from various places were on hand to make purchases.
 According to the petitioners, the agent hearing of the sales called Gilbert to his office and forbade the continuance of the sale. The round-up boss declared that he would talk it over with the other Indians. They result was that the sale went on as usual despite the orders of the agent, according to those who sent in the petition.

 There the matter rests so far as the Indians are concerned. However, Major McFatridge had heard nothing about a protest being sent in to Washington.
 Federal Inspector McClure when questioned about the matter by the Tribune said that he had not heard the Indians had petitioned the government, though he knew that some of the older Indians were bitterly opposed to the dipping proposition.
 However, the horses of the reservation will be dipped, every one of them, whether they belong to the whites or the Redmen. The work will be started in a short time and will be thoroughly done according to the doctor.

How the Mountains Were Formed.

In recent years theories of mountain formation have changed like everything else scientific. The ancient belief that the mountains were the "muscles" or the "backbone" of the continents never was scientific at any time. In stead of being an extra layer of rock that binds the continents together, they are the ragged edges of the cracks in the masonry, or folds in the crust or extrusions of internal matter through the cracks. They are points of the crust's weakness rather than its strength. The new theories bark back to the original formation of the earth. The conception of a hot drop of a world spinning in space, gradually cooling and forming a shell as smooth as a billiard ball, has been partly abandoned. The nebular hypothesis has been modified, the so-called meteoric hypothesis has been found inadequate; and the more plausible theory of Professor Chamberlain has been put forth.
 This latest theory argues the formation of the world by gradual accretions from planetary bodies. It assumes the origin of our solar system in a common spiral nebula—the nebula being in a thin solid or liquid state, as suggested by the spectrum analysis of it. The knots or portions of the nebula showing the most concentration are the nuclei of future planets, and the thinner haze the portions from which the knots are formed. All these knots move about the central mass (the sun) in elliptical orbits of considerable eccentricity. The planetesimals are gathered in, and through accretion form such a world as ours, by the crossing of the elliptical orbits in the course of their inevitable shiftings.

 The theory deduces several stages or periods in the formation of the earth. (1) Separation of the material of the earth from the parent nebula. (2) Condensation of the rock matter into a molten spheroid through accessions of materials and in creased heat. (3) Solidification of the molten spheroid at the center and the outer edge. (4) Great volcanic action following solidification of the crust. (5) Periods of atmospheric action over volcanic action.—John C. Van Dyke in Scribner.

The Ape's Point of View.

Professor Gersung, the well-known Vienna surgeon, in his book, "Sedimentation of Life," has a parable concerning what the ape thought of the doctrine of evolution. When the news of Darwin's theory reached the Simian land the wise ones proved at once that he had got hold of the wrong end of the fact. It was the ape had evolved from man, who though bearing a similarity to the monkey, is every way his inferior. The man is naked; he has only two hands; his undeveloped extremities are fitted only for walking on the ground; he still eats flesh; he kills his own kind and other animals; he lacks intelligence, as shown by the fact that he does not enjoy life; he dwells and shortens life by working and worrying to make money which, when he has made it, he is unfit to enjoy. He lives, it is sure, in herds, but in perpetual competition and conflict. The ape on the other hand, has a warm garment, he dwells above the ground and has four hands adapted to every work and to moving rapidly from branch to branch. He feeds upon only fruits and nuts, and lives peaceably in great unions. He is, bodily and mentally, the crown of creation.
 Certainly, in regard to enjoying life, man is behind the ape. Having accepted as a cardinal truth that man's business in the world is to make money he does not, in his eager pursuit of the dollar, take time to live. Work keeps every energy of body and mind at the highest tension. As a result, the rest of life is lost; the man is old in face and heart, while young in years. When he has made his wealth he has no longer capacity to be happy. The ape is the wiser.—Mary E. Bryan in Home Magazine.
