There is No Color Line in Brazil.

Of the various manifestations of atmospheric laxity none is more interesting to a North American than the haziness of the color line. This land of coffee and sunshine is a land tinged with African blood. Of the seventeen and a half millions of people in the country only some six millions are whites. There were 750,000 slaves in Brazil when Princess Regent emancipated them in 1887, and there are neighborhoods where the negro problem is a problem only in so far as life may be a problem to the Africans in their native jungles. You go ashore, for instance, to buy cigars at Bahia. It was a great place in the old slave days, before the center of industry moved down to Sao Paulo; is a fine place still, with its tall stage-scenery buildings, painted white or pinkish or pale blue, the fronts—an echo of the Dutch visitation of long ago—often decorated with tiles. You climb the narrow winding streets to the upper town, looking out on the turquoise sea. Everywhere are negroes—huge women, with enormous chocolate-colored arms, in white cotton wrappers and turbans. They come swinging down the cobblestones, squat beside their fruits and green parrots, lean out of ground-floor windows, smoking fat, black cigars. Try to take a photograph of one and her broad shining face clouds over with fear of the sun-know, and up goes her apron over her head. In the cool interiors of these houses with spotless patios and doorways, white folks doubtless must be hiding from the sun, but one scarcely sees them. Eighty per cent of the inhabitants are negroes. You feel as though you were walking through a deserted white man's city held by a black army of occupation.

About one-third of Rio's population are negroes. From blacks who might have been landed from a slave ship yesterday the African tinge fades out through every gradation of mixed blood up to the of the cultured whites of the ruling class. —Arthur Ruhl in Scribner's.

footwear, we have not overlooked the shoe needs of the man or woman who want plain, solid comfort. We have a big trade in good, sensible soles—every line and every curve speaks for comfort. And style are made of best oak-tan. While we carry all the latest and sweetest shapes in isn't sacrificed either, for they are shapely and graceful in outline. The soles need leather, and every pair is hand-sewed throughout.

We invite your attention to a special line of these Comfort Shoes, Dr. Reed's Cushion Soles. Wear one pair of these shoes, and if you appreciate real comfort, we are sure you will be back for another pair when they are gone. We have also the celebrated Walk-over Shoes in blucher, vels, Oxfords, in kid, tan and patent, all styles, all prices, all sizes. Also C. P. Ford's Ladies' Shoes in all styles.
