PRESIDENT AND VICE- PRESIDENT ASPIRANTS

Favorite Sons, and Others.. Possibilities and Near Possibilities for the Republican Nominations for President and Vice-President — Their Personalities and Achievements—Written by Staff Representatives of the United Press Who Are Personally Acquainted with the Subjects.

Washington, June 11.—Theodore Roosevelt, youngest president of the United States, will be only a few years over fifty years of age on election day.

Probably no man living or dead has done a greater variety of big things than he in half a century—or has broken more precedents. His every act, official and private, has been a contradiction of established usage, yet every time he has knocked some moss-grown precedent into the proverbial cocked hat, the world has declared, as soon as it has realized its breath, that the Roosevelt way was best and has wondered why no one else thought of doing it that way years before.

Roosevelt was scarce out of college before he claimed the center of the stage, and the spot-light of publicity has been following him around ever since. In the legislature of New York state, as civil service commissioner, as police commissioner of the Metropolis, as assistant secretary of the navy, he plunged into the midst of events—or, if there were no events in reach worth mentioning, he made them.

When the police force of New York, inefficient with dry rot and riddled with vice, came under his control, he shook it up until its old bones rattled and gave the grafters cause that they remember to this day. He didn't quite convert the force into a band of evangelists, but he made the Tammany Tiger shiver in his lair and caused the name of Roosevelt to be known throughout the land.

Once upon a time, when he was found in command to that dear old, peaceable secretary of the navy, John D. Long, his chief happened to be away from Washington a few days. Buzz! Bing! Before the sedate bureau chiefs in the department knew the day of the month, he had issued orders that dispatched shiploads of ammunition to the Asiatic squadron and prepared George Dewey for the day that made him famous and sent the Spanish galleons to the floor of Manila Bay.

He was the something-different politician. He told his political enemies as well as his political friends the truth. He wore his heart on his sleeve. It was unheard of. Before that day, to be a politician was to be a liar. He became the greatest politician of the age by telling the truth. He was the something-doing soldier as well as the something-different politician. When he went to Cuba, if there wasn't any fighting to be done, his men found that there was work to do. They dug kitchen sinks, they drilled, they got ready, and they stayed ready; so when the time for action came, the charge up San Juan hill was a mere picnic to those bronco-busters and grizzly-eaters.

Roosevelt loves a fight better than nine Irishmen out of ten, and the strain of Dutch blood makes him "stick" when once he mixes in. Like the Irish, he doesn't know when he is licked, and many's the time he has won out after he had apparently been beaten to a finish.

He sticks to his friends as grimly as he sticks to his foes, and the same dogged determination that makes him fight to the last ditch for what he believes is right, places him at the back of the man he claims as friend, no matter if there be a stack of affidavits as high as the Washington Monument to prove the man unworthy. Just to show his friendship and his faith in human nature, Roosevelt has appointed more than one man to office whose record reached back to the door of the penitentiary. But it should be said in the same breath that he has shown his uncompromising fairness by turning upon men found unworthy of his trust and has overwhelmed them with his wrath.

There's nothing half-way about Theodore Roosevelt. He likes a man with all his heart and soul and vigor. If he doesn't like him he hates the ground he walks on, hates his family, his relatives, his ancestors, and his birthplace. What is more, he is not at all slow to let the fact be known.

Much as he loves a fight, he loves peace better. But he makes no bones of saying that he is ready and willing to fight for peace. He wants the United States to build the biggest navy in the world so that peace shall be universal. He wants the gun pointers of our navy to be dead shots at five miles. If they are so known, what nation would war with us? If they are so recognized, what power would go to battle with another if Uncle Sam should say, "Let there be peace?"

Roosevelt loves work, and the harder the work the better he likes it. He also loves play after work, and he plays just as hard as he works. That is where the great big boys grow out in his disposition. He'd rather take a 15-mile walk in the rain, or a 70-mile gallop over the prairies, than sit in a box at the opera. He isn't partial to grand opera, by the way, and will tell you that his favorite melodies are "Garry Dwen" and "A Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight." Walking, horseback riding, tennis, boxing, and single-stick play are his favorite physical recreations, and he'd rather meet and hobnob with an old backwoods guide than a politician in a plug hat. He hates plug hats. "I feel like a stuffed cub in one of them," he observed one day, "and if I were not holding a job where I am supposed to look like a stuffed club on certain occasions, I'm blessed if I'd wear one."

Roosevelt does not use tobacco in any form, and although no tee-totaller, he has very little use for a drunkard. On one of his recent trips when he refused to take either a drink or a cigar at a banquet, one of the ladies present asked him if he had no vices?

"I can swear like a blue streak," replied the President, with a grin, "would you like to hear me?"

Roosevelt likes to preach little sermons on personal conduct, but as all the world knows that he practices in private life what he preaches in public, it forgives him for this trait. His fellow citizens have come to know that he is very human, indeed, and they like him all the better for it. They know that he is impulsive, that he often leaps before he looks, and changes his mind with the ease of a summer wind. But what matters that, when they also know him to be honest and sincere, that he detests fraud, that he places the mother on a higher plane than the soldier, and that he is working with all his might and main to right wrongs that oppress the people.

The world knows, too, that Wall street has been scared stiff ever since he has been in office; that he settled the coal strike; that he stopped the wholesale slaughter of Russians and Japanese. It knows also so that he tried to reform our spelling, that he attempted to erase "In God We Trust" from the coins of the realm, and that if he had his way the great corporations of the country would be controlled by the departments at Washington.

For all these things, in spite of all these things, the vote at the last election proved him to be the most popular man that ever ran for office in this or any other country, in this or any other period of written history.

The Best Pills Ever Sold.
"After doctoring 15 years for chronic indigestion, and spending over two hundred dollars, nothing has done me as much good as Dr. King's New Life Pills. I consider them the best pills ever sold," writes B. F. Ayscne, of Ingleside, N. C. Sold under guarantee at J. C. Perry's drug store. 25c.

FEMININE PLAYERS A SCARCITY

(United Press Leased Wire.)
Bellingham, Wash., June 11.—"Femininity and baseball are all right separated, but they will never go well together."

Thus spoke Birdie Carlton, captain of a league of female players from Chicago, as she set out today in search of players to take the places of the fair ones who were disabled during games. One miss is in a hospital with a swollen eye which a ball collided, and another is ill in Everett and the second base woman got a crack on the shin bone and is laid up for repairs. Hence, Miss Carlton is having bunches of trouble. She has inserted an ad. in one of the papers, but no new recruits are in sight.

"Girls out here don't like to play ball, anyway," said Captain Carlton.

Sore Nipples.
Any mother who has had experience with this distressing ailment may be pleased to know that a cure may be effected by applying Chamberlain's Salve as soon as the child is done nursing. Wipe it off with a soft cloth before allowing the babe to nurse. Many trained nurses use this salve with best results. For sale by Dr. Stone's drug store.

T. T. Geer, in the Pendleton Tribune advises Republicans who signed Statement No. 1 to vote for Chamberlain. Certainly.
