WILLAMETTE GRADUATES IN MEETING

The annual banquet of the Willamette University Alumni association was held at the Methodist church last evening. The old grads from all parts of the state were present, old college days were brought back to memory, and the class of 1908 was welcomed into the association.

The address of the evening was delivered by Professor F. H. Grubbs, a member of the first graduating class of the pioneer institution. He took for his subject, "The Old Institute." The speaker told stories of the pioneer days, when this country was a wilderness and the old institute was in the midst of an Indian settlement, which seemed almost impossible to the present generation.

After the vocal solo by Mrs. Van Winkle, a selection by the Willamette ladies' quartet, and the reading of the annual poem, "Reunion," by Lila Swafford, Toastmaster Judge Henry Hewitt of the class of '87 announced the toasts, and the speakers who responded to them.

The speakers and their subject were as follows: J. A. Sellwood, '66 "The Old Institute"; C. B. Moores, "The Brick building"; E. H. Belknap, "The Baited Trap"; Prof. J. T. Methews, "Willamette—Her Acrean"; P. H. D'Arcy, "Willamette's Boneyard"; Alma Hales, "Willamette—Her Cooperage"; President Homan, "Willamette—Her Air Castles." E. A. Eaton, the donor of the new $50,000 building, was to have spoken on "Willamette's Mansion," but was unable to be present.

A business meeting was held at the close of the banquet, and the following officers of the Alumni association were elected: Judge Robert Eakin, president; Judge Butler, first vice president; Mrs. Omart, second vice president; Alma Hales, third vice president; Sophia Townsend, secretary; Lena Schindler, treasurer; Lila Swafford and Frank Granis, executive committee.

NOMINATIONS

Joe!" The demonstration lasted a minute and a half.

The Hon. J. W. Fordney, of Michigan, then seconded the nomination of Cannon and his address also was greeted with great cheers.

Fairbanks Jeered.
Governor J. Frank Hanly of Indiana, next was recognized and began the nomination of Fairbanks. He became enraged at repeated interruptions from the crowd. At length, he turned to the galleries and shaking his fists exclaimed, "My friends, it will depend on you how long I talk. I can stay here all night, if necessary."

The crowd then yelled the louder and the storm of applause drowned the sound of the gavel. Every allusion to Fairbanks was greeted with jeers and cat calls. When Hanly likened Fairbanks to a pure marble shaft, the crowd went into convulsions of mirth.

The Taft delegates, who had prepared early for a demonstration for their candidate, were loud in their hooting. Senators Bereridge and Hemenway, of Indiana, overcome by the display against Fairbanks, jumped on the chairs and shouted to Hanly: "Name him! Name him!"

Chairman Lodge restored order and Hanly said:

"I'll nominate him when I get ready."

The interruptions continued frequently as he proceeded with his speech.

Mayor Charles A. Bookwalter, of Indianapolis, seconded the nomination of Fairbanks.

Mayor Bookwalter, shaking his fist in the direction of the Ohio delegation, shouted:

"Fairbanks is a real Republican. Under his direction we have made the state the Republican stronghold of America. The committee on credentials should blush to think it did not present the minority report but it didn't because it loved party repudiation more than any candidate."

General Steward L. Woodford next was recognized. In opening his speech nominating Gov. Hughes, he said:

"It is going to be a hard fight. Anyone who thinks it will be a walk-away is mistaken. New York is neither Democratic nor Republican. What we do here today will make the result of the election there."

Complain of Treatment.
Governor Hanly, of Indiana, took advantage of a moment of quiet to say in a loud voice:

"This convention may not have wanted to hear me today but the delegates will want to hear me before November and before election day they'll want to hear how Indiana is going."

Ohio was the next state which presented a candidate and as soon as it was reached Congressman Burton of Cleveland was recognized. As soon as Chairman Lodge designed him, the crowd knew that the time had come for the big demonstration, for all knew well that Burton was to place the name of William Howard Taft.

The Ohioans who had been waiting for the moment to arrive arose and started the cheering. Flags were waved in all parts of the big hall and the resounding cheers were almost deafening. It was a well prepared ovation and was well carried out.

The tall congressman from Cleveland stood for over three minutes unable to utter the first word of his address, so great was the noise and tumult. There was a tenseness about the crowd when it died down that had not been noticeable before. All seemed to wish to hear what would be said for the foremost candidate.

Chairman Lodge delivered a lecture to the crowd in the galleries calling their attention to the fact that they were there by invitation.

"I shall order the sergeant-at-arms to clear the galleries if there is not less disorder. The business of the convention must be transacted. The guests of the convention cannot be permitted to prevent procedure."

Mayor Bookwalter, of Indianapolis, also was infuriated at the treatment he received. He expressed his feelings as follows:

"The movements of the steam roller are evidently too slow for the gentleman running this convention. Out in our country the only things that hiss are snakes."

He threatened that the vote of Indiana might be found on the "wrong side" in the fall.

Hughes Named.
In his address nominating Hughes, General Woodford said:

voice. This was greeted with roars of laughter. "Longer than mine anyway," said General Woodford. Woodford paid high tribute to Hughes for his work in the insurance investigation and his fight against the bosses; but left the platform without formally placing Hughes' name before the convention, seemingly having forgotten that detail.

There was silence for a moment. Lodge looked vainly toward the New York delegation and finally said:

"There appears to be no second." The clerk continued the roll call and then came the pandemonium. Alice Longworth was seen waving a great Taft banner during the demonstration.

When the cheering finally stopped Burton began his speech. Amid the Texas delegation was raised a great pasteboard square reading:

"As pants the heart for cooling streams so Texas pants for Taft."

Suspended from the sign were a pair of "fat man's trousers. A blue silk banner bearing a picture of Taft was carried down the aisle amid a great ovation.

The Ohio delegates stood on their chairs and called to the delegate from Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, Indiana and Wisconsin to get up. The whole convention was in confusion.

At the conclusion of Burton's speech the demonstration lasted 35 minutes.

George A. Knight of California spoke five minutes in seconding the Taft nomination.

Then C. B. McCoy, of Ohio, was recognized and he placed before the convention the name of Foraker. He explained that the man originally selected to nominate Foraker had lost his voice cheering at a Foraker celebration. He said he wanted to make the shortest nomination speech in the history of a national convention. He spoke briefly. W. O. Emery, colored, of Macon, Ga., seconded the nomination of Foraker, calling him the "spartan in the gap at Thermopylae, defending the rights of the people." Lieutenant Governor R. S. Murphy, of Pennsylvania, was the next speaker. He presented the name of Senator Philander C. Knox.
