International Moral Educational Congress.

A coming event of interest is the first International Moral Education congress, which will sit at the University of London from September 25th to 29th.

The congress, which has the practical object in view of improving the moral education offered in schools, has a thoroughly representative general committee, of which M. Léon Bourgeois, late premier of France, is president. Three hundred persons, representing modern educational thought in all the leading countries of the civilized world—notably Austria, Belgium, France, Germany, Hungary, Italy, Japan, Scandinavia, Switzerland and the United States—constitute this general committee. The executive committee, too, of which the chairman and vice-chairman are respectively Mrs. Sophie Bryman and Professor J. W. Adamson, is composed of practical educationists.

The congress has the good wishes of the King and the patronage of the ministers of education for England, France, Italy, Spain, Belgium and other countries. The ablest specialists are being asked to read papers, and the subjects will include matters of school organization, methods of training and teaching, discipline, direct and indirect, moral instruction and the relation of moral education to religious, intellectual, esthetic and physical education.

Great Britain is undertaking the main organization of the congress, and is holding itself responsible for the greater part of the necessary expenditure. An appeal is, therefore, made to the public, and donations may be sent to Messrs. Roberts, Lubbock & Co., 15 Lombard street, E. C. to the treasury, Lord Avebury, or to the general secretary, Gustav Spiller, 13 Buckingham street, Strand. It may be added that the vice-presidents of the congress are: A. H. D. Acland, Sir William R. Anson, Sir Edward H. Busk, Sir William Collins, Sir James Donaldson, principal of St. Andrew's university, Lord Fitzmaurice, Dr. J. M. Lang, Sir Oliver Lodge, Sir Phillip Magnus, Dr. T. F. Roberts, Professor Michael Sadler and Dr. Anthony Trill, provost of Trinity College, Dublin.

The Vanishing Indian Reservations.

If the present policy of opening the Indian reservations to public settlement is continued, no doubt the present generation will see the last of Indian segregation. Several large reservations are to be opened to settlement within a year or two. One of the finest to be thrown open will be the Crow reservation in Montana, and not long ago a delegation of Crow Indians, headed by Plenty Coos, chief of the tribe, went to Washington to protest against the sale of their land.

It is natural for the Indians to protest against the breaking up of their reservations, even as they protested against the invasion of their broad prairies by white men. But, if the case of the Crows is considered, it will be seen that no hardship is being worked. The Crows have always been a friendly tribe, but they have been one of the most difficult to wean from their Indian ways. It is only within the last five years that their tribal mode of living was broken up. Their tribal herd of cattle was separated by the Indian agent, Major S. G. Reynolds, and the stock was assigned to individuals. The Indians were given allotments of land, and every effort was made to make them live on those allotments and become prosperous farmers. So well has this work succeeded that now the Crows are self-supporting. They have learned the knack of farming, and even give an annual fair at which their farm products are exhibited.

There are about 1500 Crows living on a reservation that is nearly 100 miles square. There are thousands of acres that can never be used under the present system, save for grazing. Most of it is leased to white men who run cattle and sheep thereon. To take this land and open it to white settlement is not working a hardship on the Indians. On the contrary, the more white neighbors they have the more rapid will be the Indians' progress as farmers.

What is true in the case of the Crows is true of most of the other tribes. The policy of opening the waste lands of the reservations is a good one—good for the Indians as well as the white man. The reservation has never been anything but a makeshift and a source of scandal and laziness at the best. The sooner it is wiped out of the scheme of things the better for all concerned. —Denver Republican.

It is better to cure the little cough than to take chances of consumption. The best cough cure is Kemp's Balsam. Druggists sell it at 25c and 50c a bottle.

Chines Promotion of Fishing Industry.

The acting governor of Shantung has recently sent a report to the ministry of agriculture and commerce regarding the coast sea fishing of China, in which he calls attention to the fact that everything secured from the sea finds a ready market in China, and even when such products are spoiled they are used for oils and fertilizers, both of which are much needed in the empire. In order that the Chinese people should become better acquainted with the products of the ocean and increase their skill in securing them, schools have been opened in ten places in China where teachers and scholars are engaged in work which is expected to increase their knowledge of this subject. By a combined tabulation of the entire coast country the governor estimates that the annual gain to China from the fisheries is something over $3,000,000 United States currency, the exports annually amounting in value to about $1,165,000.

The governor suggests that the industry be divided into three great districts, so that with the aid of modern methods, combined with skill and practice, the output may be increased. Chili and Shantung provinces should form the first of these districts, Kiangsu and Chekiang provinces the second, and Fukien and Kwangtung the third. Each of these districts should maintain schools to familiarize the people with the growth and development of the different kinds of sea animals, kinds and use of various nets, preservation and preparation of the catch, etc., in order that the best methods and greatest care may be used in the preservation of the aquatic food supply. He suggests that exact charts should be prepared in order that the governors may be able to determine the limits of their authority and that the bounds and rights of each district can be clearly defined.—Wilbur T. Grocery in Consular Reports.
