JAMES AUSTIN LARSON, TELECONI EXPERT, STANDS UPON HIS RECORD OF ACHIEVEMENTS.

Another Strong Testimonial to the Efficacy of the Science of Vibration as Administered by Mr. Larson.

Portland, Oregon, July 5.—James Austin Larson, originator of Telecon, the science of vibration, is a modest man in claiming credit for what he accomplishes in the treatment of human ills. His patients do the talking for this really wonderful healer. Mr. Larson has in his possession dozens of endorsements from persons prominent in financial and commercial life, but regards with greater favor the voluntary testimonial of the individual patient.

James Austin Larson, Originator of Telecon, is now at the Willamette Hotel.

Such an one is that of E Watkins, of Woodlawn, Oregon, who had to be assisted into Mr. Larson's office in the Hotel Oregon, in Portland. Mrs. Watkins came with her husband, who was completely discouraged after having tried all sorts of treatments.

Wife Not Hopeless.
Mrs. Watkins had not lost heart, and it was through her urging that Mr. Watkins agreed to give Mr. Larson a try.

By all means make it an annual accomplishment. Mr. Watkins' trouble was shaking palsy. His entire body was in a semi-paralyzed condition. His back was all drawn out of shape and he could not lie upon his back without his head drawing up several inches above on a pillow. This was caused by the contraction of the muscles through the abdomen. When Mr. Watkins came to Mr. Larson he could walk but little. Now he walks blocks without effort. The contraction has been relieved so that he can lie upon his back. His nerves are much improved, he sleeps better and best of all his bowels are working regularly for the first time in years.

In Cheerful Mood.
Mr. Watkins is now in cheerful mood and again takes a hopeful view of life. Of course, he is not yet entirely well, but the improvement in him would mean a cure in an ordinary case. Mrs. Watkins tells the story of her husband's case, and is a most delighted woman. She says her husband has taken many other treatments without sign of improvement and declares Telecon to be the most wonderful treatment in the world.

James Austin Larson came to Salem Sunday. After a much-needed rest Sunday, Mr. Larson may be found in rooms on the second floor of the Willamette hotel, where for a few days he will receive those suffering from constipation, rheumatism, nervousness, especially in women, paralysis, partial deafness, in fact a long list of the ills afflicting humanity. Mr. Larson is a busy man and those who want to see him and consult him will be wise if they go to the Willamette early.

a more patriotic or successful celebration, and never have the festivities of the Fourth been witnessed by so many people.

A whole day before the big event was scheduled to take place thousands of people from the country and the nearby towns began to arrive. A steady stream of wagons and carriages loaded with joyous country folk poured over the big bridge from early morning till midnight. Every artery leading into the city pulsated with happy, prosperous humanity, bent upon enjoying the celebration of the national holiday in the Cherry City. The Southern Pacific unloaded thousands at the depot at Salem and at the Fairgrounds. The service of the Oregon Electric railroad was taxed to its utmost capacity, and it was reported that many people living along the line, who had not purchased tickets in advance, were unable to reach the city by the electric cars. It was estimated at the close of the day that between 30,000 and 40,000 people saw the attractions that Salem had to offer on the Fourth.

And what a day it was. It seemed as if the weather had been especially made for the occasion. In the early morning, before the guns of the sunrise salute thundered over the peaceful city, the hospitable Salemites, who were once more to stake their enviable reputation on the success of the day, looked out their bedroom windows and beheld propitious omens in the heavens. All of the doubts that they had harbored in their minds for the past 24 hours were instantly dispelled. The gods were willing, and there was nothing to do but to turn loose.

And Salem turned loose. The most abject pessimist who would deny that, would be a proper candidate for the bug-house. By 9:30 o'clock the down town district was a seething mass of humanity. Bands blared forth their patriotic airs, cannon crackers roared, boys and men shouted, and women screamed when the fire crackers went off too near their Sunday dresses. Music was in the air. It made no difference by what street you entered the business section, you were encountered by a brass band that was doing its best to let you know that the Fourth of July was on.

Promptly at half past nine the starter's gun roused for the great four-mile relay race. Those who failed to see the finish of this event missed a treat long to be regretted. It was hotly contested throughout the entire course, although in the start the Indians took a lead that the Y. M. C. A. boys could not reduce until the last mile, when Milton, the crack Salem miler gave a wonderful exhibition of strength and endurance. He gained on Wilson of Chemawa, who is a sprinter as well as a remarkable distance man, but was not able to overcome the lead given to the red man at the beginning of the final mile. The Chemawa team was in much better condition and were also more experienced. The Indians won by a little more than 50 yards. Considering the fact that the race was run on ordinary roads, the time was remarkable, the four miles being covered in 20.16 1/2. The "dope" on road relays was not available at the close of the race Saturday but it is probable that the time is very close to the American record.

The parade was delayed somewhat in starting, but the vast crowds were in an optimistic mood, and they waited patiently. When it did come they were not disappointed. More mounted marshals and more decorated automobiles than were ever seen here before were in the procession. Company M of the National Guard was there in force, and 500 uniformed cadets from Chemawa added brilliancy to the parade. The floats this year were exceptionally fine and for the most part were more artistically and substantially constructed than on former celebrations. The Goddess of Liberty float was a work of art, and a more beautiful Goddess than Miss Minetta Magers never graced any procession. Every float in the parade was a feature, and great praise is due to all persons and organizations who participated in the exhibition.

The parade moved south on Front street to Ferry, east on Ferry to Commercial, north on Commercial to Court, east on Court to Cottage, south on Cottage to State, west on State to Commercial, and north on Commercial to Marion Square. Among the features in the parade were: The mounted marshals and parade committee, the squadron of decorated automobiles, the Salem military band, the Modern Woodmen band, Company M, The Goddess of Liberty float, Columbia, the battleship Oregon, the Chemawa band, the regiment of Indian cadets, the Point Victor band, the Woodburn band, the Modern Woodman drill team, the floats of the Royal Neighbors, Women of Woodcraft, W. C. T. U. and Silver Bell Circle, the states of the Union, the thirteen colonies, and the Salem Canoe club. Several business firms were represented by floats, L. U. Josse having two in the parade. The Salem steam Laundry, Mason Box Company, Mitchell, Lewis & Staver Company, and the Sanitary Milk Company participated in the procession.

At Marion Square an excellent program was rendered, and the vast audience listened with intense interest until the end of the final number of the open air exercises. August Huchstein presided and introduced the speakers of the day. Mrs. Chas. H. Hinges sang two selections, "O, My America," and "The Star Spangled Banner." Those who listened to the rendering of these patriotic songs say that Mrs. Hinges never sang better, and when this is said, what more need be added?

Walter Winslow gave a masterful reading of the Declaration of Independence; in fact one of the best interpretations of the great document ever listened to by a Salem audience.

The orator of the day was Hon. Willis S. Dunaway. The address was truly eloquent, and held the attention of the several thousand listeners throughout. Mr. Dunaway's speech was for the most part of an historical character. He traced the history of the colonies through the revolutionary war, giving the causes and interpreting the significance of each step in the great struggle for independence.

In closing his eloquent and patriotic oration, Mr. Dunaway said: "Had there been no Saratoga there would have been no Yorktown, and our proud United States of today might be in the position of the Canadian provinces to the north of us—owing allegiance to the British crown, loyally upholding the British government, claiming the protection of the laws of the great British empire and we lifting our voices to the strong refrain of Rule Britannica; but much as we respect the English ruler and highly as we regard modern British laws and justice, we are prouder to salute the American ensign than the British Jack, and I frankly confess it would delight me not half so much to be a loyal subject of King Edward VII as it does to claim citizenship in common with that sturdy descendant of Revolutionary stock who directs the administration of our free government at Washington.

"And as we go to our homes today let us not forget our great debt, our immeasurable obligation to Washington and the thousand other heroes and heroines of the Revolutionary time."

After the speech making came the baby show, which was one of the most thoroughly enjoyed events of the day. The baby show was in charge of C. L. Parmenter and Hal. Patton, who were assisted by Del Dinamore, Dave Yantis and Zedoc Riggs. The judges were Mrs. E. R. Jacks, Mrs. D. M. Frakes and Mrs. A. L. Orr.

Lloyd Anderson was the prettiest boy baby and Hazel McCormick was the prettiest girl baby. Webster

Hayes had the longest hair, Madeline Moir was the smallest, Earl Everson was the fattest boy baby, and Florence Nusbaum was the fattest girl baby. Arthur Edwards could say "Patton's Book Store" plainer than any other youngster of his age (he was 18 months), and Lutrel Kent, who was about the same age, gave the most satisfactory pronunciation of "Tom Cronise" Photograph Gallery."

Immediately after noon the street sports began. Probably the most interesting feature of this part of the program was the horse races on Liberty street. The races were witnessed by a large crowd which was so eager to see the excitement, especially the ladies' race, that it was with difficulty that the police kept the spectators inside the curbs. The ladies' race was won by Miss Wieda Soloman, while Miss Rhea Willson was a close second. L. Martin won the men's handicap, and Fred Schindler the free for all.

The other sport events were: The 50-yard dash, won by Levi Sorter, who also won the 100 in 10.4, which is excellent time considering the fact that the race was run in the street, the quarter mile bicycle race, won by V. Berenger, slow bicycle race, Carl Hinges, and the three-legged race, Carl Hinges and S. Ostrander.

The Modern Woodmen were scheduled to run a 400-yard relay race with the Woodmen of the World, but the latter failed to show up, and the race was run with a picked team from Chemawa. Each man ran 100 yards, and the Indians won by a considerable margin. A handsome cup was offered for the winner of the race between the two lodge teams, and the trophy went to the Modern Woodmen through default. The Indians ran for appearance money. The Chemawa team was composed of M. Francis, Peter Casey, John Dan and Charles McCully. The sprinters in the Woodmen team were Melvill Davis, John Holman, Murry Shanks and V. Low.

At 6 o'clock the comic parade started. Many of the floats in the morning parade were used, and the characters burlesqued to perfection. No Fourth of July celebration is complete without its comic supplement, and the comic supplement was a success from start to finish. Most of the credit for this feature is due to Cook Patton, who managed the affair. Among the attractions in the parade were: the merry widow hat, the trained graffe, the comical hog, the domesticated ostrich, the donkey twins, the giant Dutchman and the carryall full of characterized city fathers.

The two ball games in the afternoon were attended by the largest crowds ever gathered on the local diamond, nearly 2000 persons having paid admissions. In the first game Salem won, 7 to 1, and in the second Woodburn won by a score of 6 to 1.

It is estimated that close to 10,000 persons gathered along the river bank to witness the aquatic sports and fireworks. The river was ablaze with brilliantly illuminated boats of every description.

J. R. Rodger's launch, which won the first prize at the Portland Regatta, was the most conspicuous boat on the river. It was lighted by 500 incandescents of various colors, and as it passed up the stream it was loudly cheered by the throngs on the banks.

The Salem Canoe club made a fine showing, having 13 boats on the river manned by sturdy youths in their white and green canoeing costumes. The canoe race was won by Victor Allen and Clifford Benson, with Ed Gillman and Seymour Skiff second. The motor boat race was won by the Welda, with Elmo Miles at the wheel, the Anona, driven by Frank Willman, Jr., finishing second. Miles also won in the same boat in a race with Clifford Glover in the Verda, Fred Hill in the Iola, and Frank Wheeler in the Anna.

Owing to the incompetency of the man brought down from Portland to superintend the fire works, this event did not come off as smoothly as was expected, but the pyrotechnics were all there, and those who stayed till the end of the exhibition witnessed as good a display of fire works as was ever shown in Salem. Toward the end of the performance Watt Shipp took charge of the affair and the show wound up shortly before 11 o'clock in a literal blaze of glory.

Several beautiful set pieces were displayed, among which were "Welcome," "Good night," "The Blazing Sun," "The Steam Fire Engine," and "The Revolving Fountain."

The celebration ended with the grand ball at the skating rink.

"THE CRISIS"

TOMORROW NIGHT

The dramatization of Winston Churchill's "Crisis" which will be presented at the Grand theater Tuesday night, promises to be one of the greatest amateur successes ever attempted by local people. During the past two weeks the local members of the cast have practiced faithfully each evening under the skilled direction of Mr. Al W. Fordyce, and steady improvement has marked each rehearsal.

The final preparation for the play will be held Tuesday afternoon at the theater and the members of the cast handle their respective parts with great ease, being perfectly drilled with respect to strong climaxes and situations, as well as being better perfect. The large ticket sale which has been going on during the past week makes the popularity of the undertaking, and the young actors will play to a crowded house Tuesday night.

A generous share of the proceeds will be placed in the treasury of the ladies library board for the benefit of the public library.
