Copying American Hotels.
 A prominent hotel man from Berlin is visiting American cities with the idea of seeing the latest features of hotel arrangement and administration. He reports a new phase of the Americanization of the Continent. The army of travelers from this country has forced changes and marked improvements in the European hotels.

One of these is the greater amount of space devoted to lobbies and public lounging places in the newer hotels. The old notion that no one should go to a hotel unless he was a patron is disappearing. Now there are chairs for those who wish to sit down. The American custom of meeting friends and acquaintances outside the private room is gaining favor.

Another thing copied from the American hotel is the larger room taken up by restaurants, cafes and dining-rooms. The habit of dining in public seems to be growing abroad. In like manner weddings, receptions and large dinners are being held in the hotels. People who come in from their country homes are getting used to staying at the hotels for short periods instead of going to the trouble, as formerly, of opening up their town houses.

The social aspects of the case are supplemented by the advances in mechanical directions. The American hotels are far ahead in the matter of conveniences for guests, the small items which add so much to one's comfort when they are at hand and whose absence has so marked an effect upon one's happiness. But many European hotels are now fitted with American furniture, with American telephones and with other devices for luxurious comfort.

In cuisine, however, the European hotel man claims pre-eminence. The proof of this he finds in the French and German chefs so abundant in America. But with this one exception he frankly admits that there is much to learn in this country in connection with up-to-date hotel equipment, arrangement and administration.—Chicago Tribune.

Mr. Harden is right; it's the best of all medicines also for weakness, lame back, and all run down conditions. Best too for chills and malaria. Sold under guarantee at J. C. Perry's drug store. 50c.

Reckless Autos—

Man complaints are made at reckless auto drivers rubbing their cars over the big steel bridge at Salem, frightening teams, and making travel unsafe for farmers and town people. Most of the auto drivers come from Portland and imagine they can do about as they please when they get out of that city, as all the rest of Oregon is open game for them. The Salem police are on the lookout and some one will be hauled into court before any accident happens. Some private citizens say they are arming themselves and will not be driven of the public thoroughfares.
