that marvelous labyrinth of wild nature without being thrilled by it. Instantly your thoughts fly to the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, as seen from Point Sublime, only this is in miniature. The fact that you stand on a sharp point, from which the world drops steeply away on three sides, is not the thing that is so profoundly impressive. It is the depth, the breadth, and the awful wildness of the maze of bad lands into which you look. Before you, and on either hand, there stretch miles upon miles of ragged chasms, divided and walled in by a thousand fantastic cliffs, and buttresses, and domes of naked hardpan that stubbornly defy the forces of erosion and refuse to crumble down. In several places there are masses of earth architecture that remind one of the ruined castles on the Rhine. These bare walls are mostly of gray earth, not rock, and the carving of them has been most strangely done. It is only when you climb among them and touch them that the wonders of erosion are fully revealed.

The hard, dry earth has most stubbornly resisted the disintegrating action of water, wind, heat and cold, and there are hundreds of earth cliffs nearly as smooth and as perpendicular as the brick walls of Harlem.

I dislike to estimate the total drop of these bad lands from the plateau to the waters of Snow creek, but I think it is about 800 feet.

After the first moments of spell-bound wonder and amazement, you begin to pick out the geography of what lies before you. You see that the axis of all this wild waste of carved and furrowed earth is the level and very narrow valley of Snow creek, which comes down from the west. You can easily trace its course eastward to the point where it bends abruptly northward and runs into the Missouri, parallel with the last eight miles of Hell creek. In the creek bottom there is a sinuous string of cottonwood trees, aspens and willow brush.—W. T. Hornaday, in Scribner.

RAILROAD FOREMAN ARRESTED

The feud between Mrs. Watt and the Oregon Electric company came to a climax at 10:30 o'clock this morning when the railroad crew cut down the tree in front of the Watt residence at the corner of High and Trade streets and the foreman was arrested.

Mrs. Watt has been guarding the tree for several days, and in her determination not to have it destroyed she was upheld both by the mayor and the park board. This morning Mayor Rodgers sent Special Police-man Welch to the place with orders not to allow the foreman to cut down the tree without the permission of the park board, and without coming to an agreement with Mrs. Watt in the matter of compensation for the tree.

Roadmaster F. W. Prael, who is in charge of the work, refused to listen to the order, and said that he would have the tree removed at once without coming to an agreement with anybody, and ordered his men to proceed with the work. Welch thereupon arrested Prael, and while the policeman was taking him into custody, the construction gang made quick work of felling the shade tree.

Prael was ordered to appear before the police judge at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, when a hearing in the case will be had. Prael says that he will secure bonds for the whole crew, if necessary, but that the work will go on. The company claims that it has the right under the franchise to cut down shade trees or do anything else necessary to the construction of the road. The track that is being laid where the tree was destroyed cuts the 20-foot curb on High street and the 12-foot curb on Trade street, and passes within one foot of the corner of the sidewalk.

Mrs. Watt has made several offers to Roadmaster Prael. She said this morning that when he asked her some time ago what she would take for the tree, she told him she would take $150, and that Prael replied that he considered this a reasonable compensation. However he paid no further attention to it, but made several attempts to cut down the tree, and was prevented only by the armed watch that the lady kept on her property.

Attorney C. L. McNary then sent word to Mrs. Watt to put in a claim against the company for any damage done to her property. Mrs. Watt said that after due consideration she placed the amount at $100 and had the assurance of the proper authorities that the Oregon Electric must come to an agreement before the men could interfere with the tree. The outcome of the case will be of interest to many property owners.

The Stage in Germany.

When the poet, Herr Adolf L'Arronge, in company with some prominent actors, founded the Deutsche theater in 1882 at Berlin the general verdict was that this venture was destined to ruin within the first few years. People doubted whether in the capital of the German empire there was room enough for a rival of such a first-class theater as the Royal Schauspielhaus. That the new theater proved a great success from a business point of view was a great surprise, but more important was the new style of dramatic art for which it led the way. L'Arronge combined the advantages of the Meiningen style, based on a perfect mise en scene and a harmonious ensemble, with the "star" system of foreign stages. He wished to rival Laube of the Vienna Burgtheater as a discoverer of young exceptional talents, and was not sparing with wages for winning their services for his stage. Thus his ten years of personal management brought such great actors and actresses as Joseph Kainz, Agnes Sorina, Max Pohl, Maria Ortwine, Otto Sommerstorf and Teresina Gessner to the foreground. But he was very severe in his demands of thoroughgoing preparation. Even these artists were compelled to go through fifty or sixty rehearsals ere a new piece was publicly performed. Some people said that he took away the freshness of a fair trial from the elaborate performance of his stage. He, however, contended that not the slightest hitch ought to be detectable by an experienced eye when the public is invited to attend. If stagery is an art, he explained to his actors, the rules of handicraft must be first fulfilled by constant practice. The laboriousness of the German middle class was, in his opinion the only guarantee of artistic success. It has been pointed out that his social surroundings account for the principles introduced by him on the leading German stage. Indeed, he inherited from his father, the conductor of a theatrical orchestra, the sense for thoroughgoing training so characteristic of all the higher branches of human activity in the fatherland, a middle-class virtue that accounts for the success of many things made in Germany. As a poet he always chose his plot from the complications of life found in the middle classes. His masterpiece in this respect is undoubtedly the sentimental comedy, "Mein Leopold." That it is an excellent specimen of good workmanship, sensible and sound in conception and diction, and free from extravagances, is admitted even by those critics who find it rather commonplace. We may take it for granted that L'Arronge will keep his place for some time as a dramatic poet, and that his influence as a stage manager will never be lost again in the fatherland.—Continental Correspondence.
