Grand Jury Work— The grand jury yesterday returned an indictment against one Peery, charged with obtaining money under false pretenses from C. F. Allen, the proprietor of a Commercial street rooming house. The amount in question was $35 and was the result of a check given by Peery to the landlord calling for that sum on the First National bank of this city. The bank had no funds to the credit of the drawer of the check, hence his arrest. The jury filed a request that the court commit young Clarence Gerr, the horse thief, to the Oregon reform school, took the afternoon off for an official visit to the asylum and the poor farm, and then adjourned till Monday next, at 10 o'clock.

To the Public— The Electric Fixture & Supply Co. have remodeled the interior of its factory building at No. 245 N. Liberty street. The entire display is now located on the ground floor. The public is cordially invited to call and examine the elegant stock of gas and electric fixtures and an elaborate assortment of globes, shades and art glass. Mr. Hartwig, a New York designer of gas and electric fixtures, wall brackets and ceiling effects, has charge of the fixture department. joking. The inferiority of the English, where such inferiority exists, he thinks, is due to the "exclusive cultivation of the classical languages" and the custom of holding written examinations in the cases of modern languages where pronunciation ought to be an essential consideration. He declares: "America is far and away ahead of England in the cultivation of the mother language, as, indeed, of all modern languages. At Harvard the study of English is represented by a staff of 19 members, which deals with it in its most various aspects. Philadelphia has a magnificent school of German; the writings and scholars it has produced are already making their influence felt at our universities in Germany. America, however, unlike England, properly appoints the teachers thus educated to the positions for which they have qualified, making them, and not classical students, their instructors of modern languages in the secondary schools. "With all this strict and comprehensive training in modern languages, and particularly in English, is it any wonder that the nasal sounds and vulgarisms of the educated American's phrasing begin to disappear? Two years ago I went to America completely under the influence of the English prejudice against American pronunciation. I returned filled only with admiration for the work done in America, and the progress achieved by Americans throughout the whole of this important field. When a young American university man who has graduated in English comes to Berlin, I can quite without misgiving, intrust him with an English conversation course in my English seminary. The 'A. B.' from the northern parts of England, on the other hand, suffers, often as not, from the vitiating influence of dialect. These are some of the reasons why we feel the heartiest satisfaction that the principals of the American schools show alacrity in receiving our headmasters in embryo. Next Autumn the first contingent will cross the Atlantic. They will carry with them, from Germany to America, 'branches of friendship and international good will.'—Literary Digest
