

GIRL

bed after an all-night search for her. Clara did not return to her home last evening for dinner, and, when she failed to return later in the evening, a search was instituted for her. Inquiries elicited the information that none of her friends had seen her all day, and her parents were frantic.

Officers were called in, and the whole neighborhood was searched thoroughly, but with no result. The parents returned home heart-broken at an early hour, and found their daughter in her bed bleeding and unconscious and near death, as the result of terrible mistreatment.

When the girl regained consciousness, she repeated her story to officers. She had been attacked by three men on the street yesterday morning, and carried away in a cab. A gag was forced into her mouth and a veil thrown over her head, so that she had no chance to call out, and did not know where she was carried. The girl said she was carried to a lonely cabin, where she was subjected to the most terrible outrages. She lost all consciousness, and knew nothing more until she was put in her bed. The whole town of Shousetown is aroused over the news of the crime and posess are searching for the lonely house, of which the girl could give but a vague description.

GAS PIPE

San Bonita county, were executed for the murder of A. Ruiz.

The crimes for which Louis Dabner and John Siemsen paid the death penalty today were a series of cold-blooded murders which caused a reign of terror in this city immediately after the earthquake. With robbery as their motive Dabner and Siemsen dashed out the brains of three innocent men, using iron weights and gas pipes. The criminals first slew Johannes Pfisterer, a humble shoe merchant in his little establishment on McAllister street. Three weeks later they murdered William Friede, a haberdasher, on Market street, near Jones. A short time after M. Munakets, president of the Kimmon Ginko, a Japanese bank at O'Farrel and Webster streets, was murdered in broad daylight, his clerk was dangerously injured and $2800 in coin stolen by the murderers. It was for the Japanese murder that the pair was hanged.

The thugs interposed their murders with many robberies. Dr. T. B. W. Leland was one of their victims, but he escaped unharmed. An convict, an innocent man, was sent to the penitentiary for the robbery, and later released when Dabner's confession exonerated him.

Father Cries of Grief.
Dabner's poor old gray-haired father, who got him to make his terrible confession, died of grief a few months ago. His withered mother visited him for the last time at San Quentin a few days ago, and, while she cried and cried, the convict passionately sobbed and said no word of repentance.

Dabner Without Feeling.
Mrs. Dabner, broken-hearted and ill unto her death, is at her home in Petaluma today. Dabner's two brothers, Will and Leo, called on him for the last time last evening. The condemned man showed no emotion as he talked to them, though they were greatly affected.

Murderers Reconciled.
Dabner and Siemsen died friends. The reconciliation was effected last night, Siemsen extending the hand of forgiveness. Before Dabner retired for the night Siemsen wrote the following note and gave it to a guard to pass to Dabner for his signature:

Pathetic Note.
"Mother Dear: Forgive Dabner. You, mamma, forgive and forget all. This is Dabner and I. May you, in your grief, feel for Mrs. Dabner. What you will suffer so will she. Pray for us in this sad hour's misfortune. (Signed) Johnny Siemsen and Louis Dabner."

The note was written on the back of a photograph, which was the last picture of the two taken together when they were friendly. The picture was taken at the time the two men were first brought to San Quentin under sentence of death. Since that time, some 18 months ago, neither man had spoken to the other. Siemsen was angry at Dabner for having confessed, and Dabner, in turn, was incensed that Siemsen forsook him and tried to cast all the blame of the brutal murders on his shoulders. The note was written to Siemsen's mother in far-away Honolulu, and was mailed to her this morning.

DIVORCE SUIT AGAINST LLOYD OSBOURNE

San Francisco, July 31.—The filing of a suit for separate maintenance by Mrs. Lloyd Osbourne against her husband, son of Mrs. Robert Louis Stevenson, and a writer of some note, has created a sensation here. The husband and wife, whose troubles have been the gossip of literary circles for several years, are said to be at daggers points, and it is likely that Osbourne will contest the suit by filing action for divorce.

The Osbournes were married in Samoa in 1896, but they did not live together happily very long. After the two moved to San Francisco with Mrs. Stevenson, the trouble began. The big home of Mrs. Stevenson was built in the form of a double house, one part of which was occupied by the Osbournes.

Mrs. Osbourne became insanely jealous of her husband's devotions to his mother, and the pair quarreled. Mrs. Osbourne traveled extensively, and made the charge that Mrs. Stevenson had bewitched her son, and she was trying to kidnap the Osbourne children.

Although the couple have been separated for seven years, Mrs. Osbourne alleges in her suit that her husband wilfully deserted her in 1901. She asks for alimony without divorce.

PORTLAND CAPITALIST MARRIES CALIFORNIAN

San Jose, Cal., July 31.—Charles E. Grell, a young capitalist, of Portland, Or., is on his way to Santa Barbara today with one of San Jose's most beautiful girls as his bride. Miss Bessie E. Henry, daughter of J. H. Henry, a wealthy mining man, became his bride last night, at one of the largest and most elaborate weddings this city has ever seen. Miss Gertrude McIntosh, of Seattle, acted as bridesmaid, and W. B. Mackay, of Portland, was the best man. After spending their honeymoon in the South Mr. and Mrs. Grell will make their home in Portland.

COURT COUPLE TO CONVERSE

Chicago, July 31.—Frantic signals in the sign language are being exchanged today by Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Hartigan, while they are packing up their belongings preparatory to living apart. Yesterday the court enjoined the Hartigans from speaking to each other for two days, but provided that if they were able to pack and separate before that time, the injunction would be dissolved.

When the Hartigans appeared in court with their marital troubles, Patrick said his wife made him tired, she talked so much. The judge issued the injunction.
